A Supplement to the Mariner Newspapers 1986

A house tour provided by Globe's expert handy man

By Janette Holt
Mariner Correspondent

In an age of the new home bonanza, with housing prices as they are, and labor at an all time high, what makes the mind of the handy-man home buyer tick? For the answer we traveled over to the home of Peter Hotton in South Weymouth.

As the Managing Editor of the Home and Garden Section of the Boston Globe as well as an avid handy-man himself, he graciously gave us the cooks tour, in an attempt to answer this question.

If variety is the spice of life, what better place to look for it than in an 18th century colonial home. This home dates back to approximately 1760. The exact history has remained unclear, like so many of the older homes in our community, a mystery in itself despite constant inquires.

However for Peter and Lucille Hotton with the aid of their two children, this house is filled with the treasures of their past, creating an enchanting atmosphere of its own, in their lifetime.

From top to bottom, this handy man has preserved within reason, renovated with thought and successfully updated the structure with painstaking care. In tones of blue and biege, the livingroom maintains the colonial eliment with a mixture of original and creatively added woodwork. In an effort to heighten the ceilings, Peter exposed the hand hewn beams, added a few 19th century beams for continuity of the eye and insulated for added warmth.

As you scan the tastefully decorated room, your eye is drawn to the fireplace, with a bee hive oven of brick.

Once used to bake bread, this oven has been left intact over the years. The brick hearth surrounding this fireplace has all been lifted and turned, exposing its natural side, as it had been painted at some point in time.

The original wainscoating has been retained, throughout the room. As in many older homes, the wide pine floors were in need of repair.

In an effort to correct this problem, the flooring was lifted, underpinnings strengthened and secured, boards sanded, placed back down and urethaned. This work was all done by Peter and the beauty of the rich pumpkin pine has been shining for over 10 years now.

The favorite room in this home is the dining room. Once again the original wainscoating has been retained with refinishing and painting. Wide pine board flooring adds to the charm, however the enchantment here is the fireplace with Mexican mosaic tiles, which Peter added, of blue and white.

There are corner bookcases which conceal heating ducts and act as a showcase of family treasures. The interesting artwork which has been collected over the years is sure to bring the gift of gab to the table, during the course of the evening.

As the dining room and livingroom are adjacent to a busy street, it would seem reasonable to assume that these rooms would suffer from considerable noise. However, in addition to the traditional storm windows in place outside, a third window has been used on the inside which is removable for the summer months.

This feature not only brings added warmth in the winter acting as a triple window, but brings the noise level from outside elements down to a minimun. You are unaware of their presence, and they are lightweight for easy storage.

There may never have been a kitchen large enough to satisfy the cook, however, to help solve the age old problem, Peter has developed wall cupboards for the glasswear.

Utilizing the space between the studs, an empty wall, in a hallway or eating nook, may be used to its best advantage, freeing up much needed cabinet space for other utensils and ccokwear. A butlers pantry and bath have been tucked neatly away behind the kitchen, for convenience; utilizing as much space as efficiently and effectively as possible.

Completing our tour we are invited to the terraced back yard of the home, with informal gardens and greenery. With all of Peter's years of structural work on the house, the time as arrived for gardening. This has become a passion full of many discoveries.

The informal perennial plantings and flower beds have created a picturesque setting for spring and summer. Being a handy-man at heart, Peter has taken his talents to the great outdoors.

Welcome to the Hotton home on Union Street in Weymouth.

A new addition to home financing: the home equity loan

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

Deregulation of the banking industry has caused some interesting changes in the way homeowners may secure loans for improvements or additions.

In addition to more-traditional home improvement loans or second mortgages for larger projects, many banks now offer what one loan officer calls the "last loan a homeowner will ever need" — the home-equity loan.

Home-equity loans — more properly called an equity secured line of credit — allow homeowners to borrow at any time, for any purpose. Such loans are pre-approved, and all a credit holder must do is complete a check-like draft for the required amount.

The loan is secured through the equity in your home. Equity is best described as the difference between the principal balance of the primary mortgage and the property's market value — the price it would command if it were to be sold.

That's what makes the loan such an attractive alternative to local homeowners. As home values continue to rise in the Boston area, each homeowner builds increasing equity in his or her house. Thus, the available line of credit can be several tens of thousands of dollars depending on the age of the primary mortgage.

Add these features to the fact that most equity loans are one to two percent above prime lending rates, and you have an attractive way to finance any home improvement — or any other need, such as education, recreation, cars or vacations.

Conventional loans

A simple home-improvement loan, usually for lower amounts, is handled by banks in much the same way they write auto loans or extend other types of installment credit. Second mortgages are usually executed when improvements are more expensive.

At Rockland Trust Co., the limit for home improvement loans is $5,000. Above that amount, the bank writes only second mortgages, said mortgage-department spokeswoman Carol Sinkey.

In early May, the commercial bank's rates for five- to 15-year second mortgages were around 11 percent, including the 1 1/2 points charged on all such loans, she said.

The point rate applies only to owner-occupied buildings. Another point is charged to owners of investment property seeking loans for improvements or additions.

Home equity

The equity loan offers better rates than the above-mentioned conventional loans, plus the ability to obtain more money in case an improvement project turns out to be more costly than original estimates.

As with any improvement, the homeowner's equity increases after the work is done. In some cases, that could increase the amount available in a line of credit.

Even though equity loans are fairly new — banks began offering them less than three years ago — they have apparently caught the imagination of homeowners. Area building inspectors say that, when they are aware of the type of financing behind a project, it is now typically a home-equity loan.

"They certainly have generated a lot of interest and excitement," said David MacCoy, a Weymouth Savings Bank loan officer.

MacCoy said most homeowners, who already have years of experience dealing with credit cards, quickly understand the principle behind home-equity loans.

"Revolving credit conditioned homeowners to this type of arrangement, and that's added to their appeal," MacCoy said.

"It's possibly the last loan you'll ever need if you own a house," he added.

Requirements

Home-equity loans are initially more expensive to obtain than a conventional loan might be, since all banks will require appraisal of the property. Because rates are usually favorable when compared to conventional loans, however, a homeowner should be able to recoup that cost in interest savings during the repayment period.

Whatever the loan type, though, the bank will require a mortgage survey to minimize risk.

Whatever the reason for improving or adding onto a home, local bankers suggest that the present is a favorable time to secure financing. Weymouth Savings President George Thompson Sr. forecasts that rates should remain steady or decline slightly during the balance of 1986.

"Nothing right now points to higher interest rates, though world events do have a bearing on them," he said.

A history of interest rates shows their cyclical nature. While rates are relatively low now, they will climb again at some time in the future.

"History always repeats itself," Thompson said.

Hornstra Farm converts to 'The Meadows'

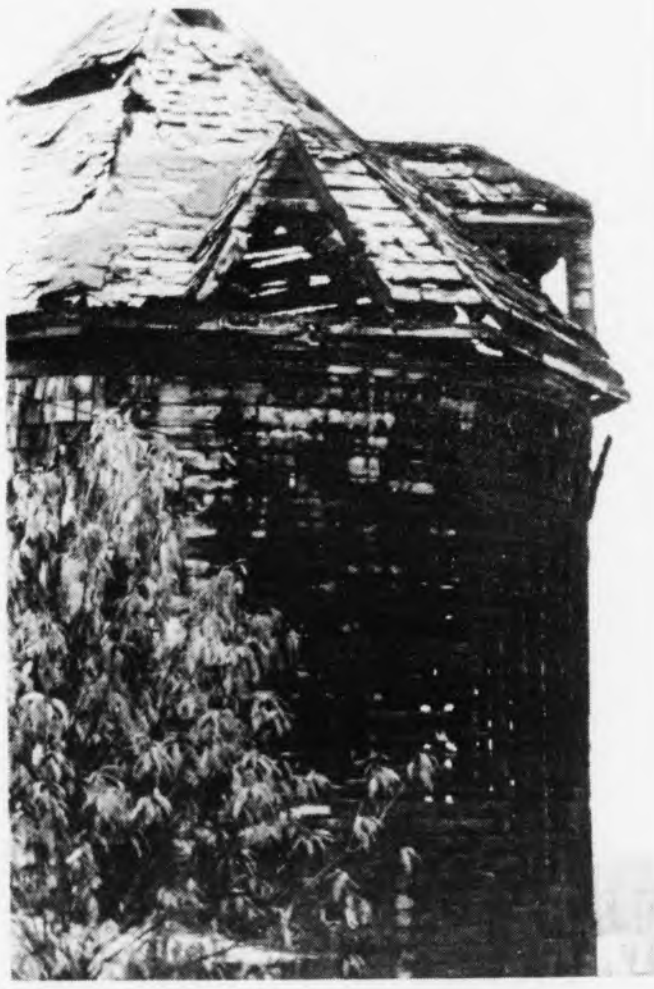
A rolling countryside was the perfect setting for the former Hornstra Farm.



This silo (damaged by fire) was damaged in May of 1979.

The barn and silo were once part of the Hornstra Dairy Farm in 1978.

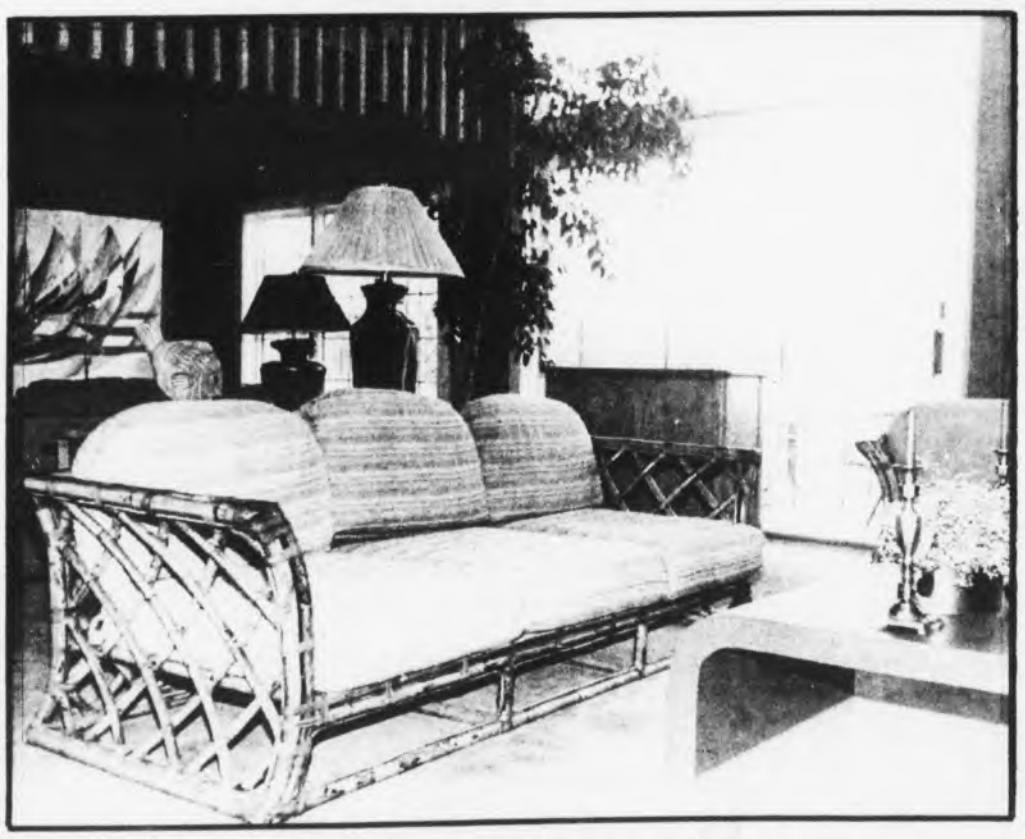
In 1986, viewers will find rolling hills and Cape Cod style condominiums at the Meadows in Hingham.



A clubhouse overlooks the Meadows' tennis courts.

Paul Wing's kitchen is bathed in light.

A new concept of country like condominiums

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

In what was once an old cornfield, a new lifestyle has cropped up in Hingham.

In 1981, The Green Company purchased the Hornstra Dairy Farm on Union Street and introduced a radical housing plan to the town boards.

It was the first cluster housing development in Hingham and it not only brought about changes in town housing ordinances, it brought about changes in the way many people in Hingham regard residential lifestyles.

The company calls their 54-unit project "The Meadows." And the name fits the atmosphere of the place like a silk glove.

Resident Paul Wing, who serves on The Meadows' Board of Trustees explained, "They tried very hard to aesthetically match the surroundings. Even though they are what you might call deluxe units, they're supposed to have a farm appearance.

"It's supposed to be a country-like setting; they used gray stain, barn boards, shingles and white trim."

Manager Peter Curry called it "the Cape Cod effect."

Here the manicured rolling hills have sprouted 11 attractive, unobtrusive buildings, which seem deceptively diminutive. Each building, except one, has five units.

The units, designed by the architectural firm Claude Miquelle Associates, has two or three bedrooms, a kitchen, a dining room and a living area with a fireplace and cathedral ceilings.

Other features include skylights and two-car garages. Some units have more than one fireplace, and others also have studies.

Some units have private courtyards, which residents design and maintain themselves, while others have decks. The building design and fences allow residents a surprising amount of privacy for such close quarters.

Inside, the units are spacious, airy and on sunny days, bathed in light. According to Curry, the smallest unit is about 1500 or 1600 square feet.

As a cat gave birth to two kittens beneath his patio chair, the manager recalled the birth of The Meadows in September 1981.

"The Green Company was looking in this area to develop condominiums here," Curry said, "They had been building condominiums for 10 or 15 years when they bought the Hornstra's farm.

"Of course, this had been a dairy farm at first and was later used for cattle corn. It was basically just flat land."

Wing, a long-time Hingham resident explained, "There was nothing here; there was a barn over on the corner of the lot with a half-rotten silo that sat at an angle.

Every artist within 100 miles of here made pictures of it, he added, "That's the only thing they had to knock down; the old barn and the silo that went with it.

"The barn used to have a wonderful weather-vane on top. Someone came in with a helicopter one time, and took it," he said, laughing.

Curry explained The Green Company went to the landscape architects at Matarazzo Design of Concord, New Hampshire and then hired subcontractors to bring in their big earth-moving equipment.

"First, they scraped off the topsoil," he said, "so they could cut the excavations. Then, they backfilled to grade the hillocks with the existing topsoil as well as fill.

"The Green Company generally builds fairly comprehensive units," he explained. "They've done The Belmont Hotel down on Cape Cod, Falmouth Port and The Tree Tops in Falmouth, and The Gables in Newton."

Curry added, "I think the construction here is very good, very solid. The best of materials has gone into this place."

He pointed out one feature he said is unusual. "There are double concrete-block fire walls between each unit," he said. "These provide insulation as well as privacy. You can bang on the wall and not be heard on the other side."

Curry said groundskeeping is The Meadows' single biggest budget outlay. "I think one thing that really helps a lot is in-ground sprinklers. If anyone builds a project, I highly recommend they put a sprinkler system in.

Residents help pay for upkeep, as well as for pool and tennis courts rights through monthly fees.

Wing explained, with all the luxuries, "The Meadows is not a club. These are private residences."

The project is simply a new way of living. And it has become popular, especially among middle-aged couples whose children have grown up and gone off to college.

It has also been popular with local people. "I'd say half the people here previously lived within 20 miles of here," Wing said.

He described his own decision to move one mile down the road to The Meadows. "I used to see them building and thought, 'What a funny looking place,' with all these wooden chimneys. It didn't look right to me at first.

"We moved in here," he added, "because, while we had a real nice house and quite a large yard, it was too much to put up with; even to hire the help was annoying."

Wing said he chose one of the one-floor units, though most of the units have two stories. "We wanted to get down to one floor and to have all the work done.

"Now we can lock the door and go whenever we feel like it," he said. "I think that's what most people probably go into condos for."

Aside from their convenience, condominiums at The Meadows have also made good investments.

"The value has gone up considerably in resale," Curry said. "We started selling them for $160,000 each in 1981. Now, they're about the $225,000 to $300,000 range.

"They certainly fit in with the community very well around here," he added, "I get calls every day from people looking to move in here. But at present we're all filled up."

Photographer Diane Schepis caught this interior shot of a fire-damaged Hornstra Farm silo.

In Braintree, Frank Marinelli accepted a housing challenge

By Olive Laing
Mariner Staff

When beautiful homes were being built on Pilgrim Road. Braintree, in 1968 by Frank Marinelli, Braintree's present inspector of buildings, Ann and Tony Marsico chose more than three-quarters of an acre of land at the end of a cul-de-sac on which they wanted their home built.

Ann found a picture of the house she wanted in a magazine and she showed it to Marinelli.

He took one look at the picture and broke into uproarious laughter.

You see, the French country home pictured had 30 rooms. The Marsico house would have eight.

And Tony, now the owner of the Robert Brooks Realty, recalls how he laughed too, thinking back to what his income as a hairdresser was 18 years ago and what a strain on the budget such a house would have been.

But couldn't the house be scaled down and still keep the basic design?

The builder decided he would give it a try and the more he got into it, the more he appreciated the challenge.

The biggest problem was the Mansard, a curb roof, uncommon at that time, having the lower slope almost vertical and the upper almost horizontal, with the same profile on all four sides of the building. Marinelli was determined the Marsicos would have the house they desired and it would have that unusual roof.

When the house was finally completed, it was so unique and lovely that it became something of a tourist attraction with people driving cars past the house slowing down to admire it.

"I think Frank Marinelli was one of the best builders in the trade," Tony says.

The facade of the house is buff-colored Georgia brick with Tennessee crab orchard stone on the corners and over the windows. In the places where there is no brick, the paint is a shade of pale melon. The buff and melon make a beautiful combination.

"A few years ago," Ann and Tony say, "we were thinking of selling the house and buying a condominium. Everyone we talked to told us we were crazy even to consider selling it."

"They said 'hold onto that house.' "

So instead of selling, the Marsicos decided to do some remodeling, a little renovation. The eight-room house became an 11-room showplace.

A one-car garage became a sunken playroom with cream-colored light stucco walls. The garage door became a huge picture window. The dark woodwork was burned, not stained. Pine furniture with coverings in lime and cream, draperies in cream color with a sheer linen look, large hanging plants, an Oriental rug and an orange L-shaped wet bar make for a comfortable, bright entertainment area.

A porch with an entrance to the kitchen was removed and the kitchen extended to match the length of the playroom. The extension makes an ideal breakfast area. A glass-topped white wicker table with chairs covered in sunny yellow and bamboo wallpaper make for a pleasant room for informal dining.

The Marsicos then added a sunroom off the breakfast area with wicker or bamboo furniture with soft cushions in lemon, a television, and loads of fresh flowers and plants which thrive in the sunny atmosphere. There is a deck off the sunroom which looks out onto the rear yard which is a riot of color with rock gardens, plants and flowers.

"When we were doing the renovating," Tony says, "I decided to add all the closet space Ann would ever need."

Ann was a professional singer at the time and she had dozens of long gowns, matching shoes and accessories.

There was an unfinished room off the master bedroom. Presto! Ann got more than she ever hoped for. A full bath was added along with a dressing room with sink with running water, a built-in vanity with mirror and makeup lights, and an exercise area.

"Ann is a health and exercise buff," Tony says, "so we made a place for her to use her exercise bike and weights."

The Marsicos highly recommend such an addition. Tony has a place to do Ann's hair and if they are going out, they are never in each other's way as they dress and groom. Ann has her place. Tony has his.

When the interior work was completed, the Marsicos then added an oversized double garage.

Their home combines areas for strictly formal, informal and casual living. Massive double doors at the entrance open into a foyer and long hall whose canvas wall covering took two men to hang. Straight ahead is the blue Oriental rug-covered staircase.

On the right is the family room or den with big comfortable brown leather sofa and chairs. An Oriental rug covers the pegwood floor. The big fireplace is of Vermont marble and grass paper covers the walls.

French provincial furniture provides a formal touch in the living room on the left where the fireplace is of Tennessee marble with marble hearth. The blue plush rug compliments the lime couch and blue chairs.

Formal dinner parties are held in the dining room off the living room where a green Mediterranean set will seat a dozen comfortably and where the screen-print wall covering offers a light airy look. Floors in the foyer, hall and dining room are white Italian marble.

A large powder room is located halfway between the kitchen and dining room.

All four bedrooms, as well as the two full baths upstairs, are furnished and decorated in different motifs.

The Marsicos love flowers and their home always has them in profusion, especially in the summer when they can pick choice blooms from their own gardens. They also rely on lamps, tall huge ones, and oil paintings to add a distinctive look to each room.

If she were to build her house today, Ann says there is only one thing she would do differently. In her white brick kitchen she would have lighter wood cabinets instead of the dark walnut ones she selected.

With the alterations they have made, Ann and Tony now have just about all they want in a home.

"We love it," Tony says, "I can go from room to room and never tire of what I see."

That is an advantage to the eclectic treatment.

"With our new master suite, we have complete privacy," he says, "and the house is large enough so that if we are entertaining, or our children are, there is no intrusion necessary."

SOLAR COVERS
SOLAR CELL SUNBLANKET FOR IN AND ON GROUND POOLS

This blanket contains thousands of tough air cells, which act as insulators to keep solar heat in pool water and prevent major water evaporation. At the same time, each cell is a powerful lens, transmitting sunlight and heat to the water at all depths, raising pool water temperature 10-15 degrees in season.

While it is made of heavy-duty poly materials, the SOLAR-CELL SUNBLANKET™ is easy to cut in the shape of any pool. It floats and forms a suction-like bond to the surface of the water, and thus requires no external tie-downs or weights.

Furniture Gallery: Unique furniture & design consultation

By Chris Cook
Mariner Correspondent

One of greater Boston's best sources of unique furniture at discount prices coupled with free interior design consultation is located in Hanover Furniture Gallery.

The store, managed by Hanover resident Jane Riley and owned by Pembroke resident Mike Broadbent, has been located at the intersection of Routes 139 and 53 for two years.

The combination of a low-pressure sales strategy and the ability to be completely flexible regarding advising and assisting customers has proven to be successful for Broadbent.

Broadbent said he provides his customers with the right to a full refund should they choose not to accept a special order. "There is no obligation (to accept)," said Broadbent. "Their deposit is fully refundable."

"We work very closely with our clients. We work very closely with them and they appreciate it," said Riley.

Riley often journeys to her clients' homes to offer advice and to answer questions regarding which styles and how much furniture should be selected. "I think a lot of people will try to overfill a room," said Riley.

Both Riley and Broadbent stressed that their goal is the long term satisfaction of a customer. "I'd definitely advise against certain pieces for certain clients even it is meant that we'd get a smaller sale (as a result)," Riley said, adding that a pleased customer is the best form of advertising.

According to Broadbent, his customers are "impressed with our unusual pieces." In particular, Broadbent is proud of his selection of period furniture.

Though most of his customer base is residential, Broadbent is seeking to expand into the commercial area. He noted successful projects with condominium projects, including Sea Mist in Mashpee and Brewster Green in Brewster.

Much of the Furniture Gallery's furniture is manufactured in North Carolina. Broadbent does include pieces from Massachusetts companies in his inventory, however. Ash tables from Athol Table, solid maple dining furniture from ER Buck and pieces from Conant Bell are among the more local companies represented.

Despite the quality of workmanship and materials offered by the Furniture Gallery, prices are surprisingly low. "We have no hidden charges," said Broadbent. For example, many stores offer free delivery but, in fact, pass on the cost in their prices. "We do charge for deliveries," Riley said. "If someone would rather not use the service, they don't pay for it. In most stores, they pay for it whether or not they use it. . . . "

Though furniture comprises the bulk of items offered by the Furniture Gallery, "we do have one of the finest, if not the finest, selection of framed prints," according to Riley. The matted and framed prints range in price from $50 to $150.

The Furniture Gallery's selling space is 3700 feet, according to Broadbent. He noted that many of his customers travel from as far away as Boston and points west. "They are often surprised by our size," said Broadbent, "I think that they expect to see a huge store," given the selection offered.

Many customers are also surprised by the low prices. Because a new state law forbids discount stores to mention "regular" prices unless the store normally uses that price, not everyone is aware of the large savings offered by the Furniture Gallery.

The vast majority of the Furniture Gallery's offerings fall into the category of "better grade" merchandise. Furniture by such companies as Key City and Duncan Phyfe comprise a large part of the total selection. Many pieces carry a lifetime warranty, according to Broadbent.

Riley's interior design expertise offers the Furniture Gallery's customers a considerable advantage. There is is no charge for Riley's services, and because she is willing to go to her customers' homes, on-site advice is readily available. Riley views her customers from the vantage point of a consultant, rather than a salesperson. "With some furniture salespeople, every piece in the storeisa'greatdeal,'" said Riley, adding, "my job is to fill my clients' needs."

Silver Lake students are learning building trade

By Chris Cook
Mariner Correspondent

Unknown to many residents of the Silver Lake School District, a well trained and highly motivated construction crew is building homes and constructing additions at virtually no cost to the customer.

The building-cabinet making program at Silver Lake Regional High School's vocational department takes its classrooms onto the work site to produce student-built construction projects. Charging only the cost of materials, teacher George Soule's class recently completed an addition to 214 Chapel St. in Pembroke.

Soule and his students built a connection between the Chapel St. house and its garage. On top of the garage, the class built a 24'x24' family room, a 20'x24' bedroom and a bathroom, according to Soule.

Soule estimated the value of his students' recent project to be "between $25,000 and $30,000." Soule added that the materials are billed directly to the customer by the suppliers. As a result, the School has no direct involvement with the actual transaction. Therefore, stressed Soule, his figures represent a "very rough estimate."

(Though proposals for charging a fee for the students' work have often been discussed, at this writing customers pay no labor charge for work completed.)

Since joining the school in 1967, Soule and his classes have built many homes and additions, averaging about one project per year. The selection of projects is based exclusively on the educational value and the necessary time investment. "We try to do a different project each year," Soule said, adding "We also like to rotate among the towns of the school district."

Requests by residents for the student builders are submitted to the school committee, the board which ultimately decides whether or not to permit Soule to accept the job for his class.

A small amount of residents actually submit requests, "though I think that will increase when this hits the Mariner," Soule stated.

Soule is happy with his work and satisfied with his school's vocational program. Prior to becoming a teacher at Silver Lake, in 1967, Soule was an independent builder for four years.

Unlike most one year student/teacher relationships, Soule spends three years with the students in his program. "I like them (his students) and they know that. I like being there. Of course, you have to keep the distance of teacher-student but you do get to know them over the years, Soule said.

Nearly twelve years of teaching has apparently not diminished Soule's enthusiasm. "At Silver Lake the vocational program is not considered a dumping ground," said Soule. Furthermore, because Silver Lake is not exclusively vocational, "there is mingling between the academic and vocational students. With that mingling, both groups benefit."

Many vocational programs "are afraid of on-site training," according to Soule. "Some schools just build models and they (the students) never know if they can even climb a ladder," Soule said.

Soule speculated that "other schools may be afraid of lawsuits (in case of injuries) or pressure from unions." At Silver Lake, the low on-site student-teacher ratio has enhanced safety. Said Soule, "We've been very fortunate never to have had a serious accident." Regarding the former point, Soule said, "We've never had any complaints here by the unions."

Soule was asked if residents are uneasy about high school students working on their homes. "The biggest problem we have is that people hate to see us go," Soule responded. "They can't find anyone cheaper than us," he added.

Soule, relaxing in his pond-side Middleboro home, described the "ideal" project. "In the ideal project, we'd design, build, and actually sell the finished house on the market," Soule said. "There's no reason we couldn't do that. No reason at all."

Crabgrass eliminated by advanced planning

There may be literally thousands of crabgrass seed under your lawn, just waiting for early spring temperatures to hit 55 degrees and hold there for two weeks. The best way to prevent them from messing up your lawn is to prevent the seeds from ever germinating.

"Advance planning is necessary to keep crabgrass under control," says Dr. Eliot Roberts, director of the Lawn Institute, a nonprofit corporation which encourages improvement of lawns through research and public education.

According to Dr. Roberts, proper lawn conditions that promise vigorous grass growth will discourage crabgrass from the beginning. Fertile topsoil no less than six inches deep, proper mowing and watering of lawns can team up to place crabgrass at a disadvantage in competing for sunlight, water and nutrients.

Soil acidity can play an important role in stopping crabgrass. In most instances, soil pH, or degree of acidity, should be kept above 6.5 with lime applications. A lawn's pH level can be determined by home soil-testing kits or, even more accurately, by a professional lawn care service, Dr. Roberts says.

Because crabgrass grows low to the ground, it is not stunted by low mowing or "scalping". A closely-mowed lawn, in fact, gives crabgrass the room it needs to send out runners and spread. Trimming your lawn instead as high as three inches, particularly during spring and summer months, will help control crabgrass.

Roberts also says that frequent light waterings of lawns contribute to shallow grass root systems and weaken defenses against crabgrass. Deep watering or "drenching" to a depth of six inches is more likely to help your lawn fight off this pest.

Another remedy, which is used widely by professional lawn care companies, is use of a pre-emergence herbicide such as bensulide, which is sold under the trade names of Betasan, Betamec, PreSan and Lescosan.

"Crabgrass is probably the number one lawn problem that keeps us in business," says James Brooks, executive vice-president of the Professional Lawn Care Association of America (PLCAA), a trade organization comprised of hundreds of lawn care companies.

According to Brooks, nearly all PLCAA-affiliated lawn care companies use a pre-emergence herbicide to prevent crabgrass from germinating.

To ensure effective control of crabgrass with pre-emergence compounds, Brooks stresses that proper timing of application, even coverage of treated areas, and use of labeled amounts of the herbicide are essential.

For many homeowners, use of a professional lawn care company is an effective alternative for fighting crabgrass. On an average, annual cost for using a lawn service will range between $80 and $150—or about what many homeowners spend every year on fertilizer, seed, control compounds and lawn equipment.

"Professional lawn operators know how to correctly measure materials, time their application, and maintain equipment properly to ensure correct, safe application of control compounds," Brooks says. "These businesses also are trained to know the agronomic needs of your lawn and what might be needed in terms of fertility and control efforts for weeds, insects and diseases."

Man-made products can't duplicate hardwood flooring

By Welch Luther Lumber Co. of Scituate

Hardwood flooring has undergone a significant resurgence in recent years. In 1986 wood is expected to capture 15 percent of the floor covering market. This increased market share is caused by several factors.

Wood flooring prices have remained relatively stable compared to products such as carpet and vinyl coverings, making wood flooring more affordable by comparison.

The beauty of wood flooring cannot be duplicated by man-made products. The grain and coloring of each piece of wood is slightly different from the next, making each floor unique.

New, more durable finishes have made possible the use of wood in areas such as kitchens and bathrooms, where linoleum and tile would have been used in the past. New colors, sizes, and patterns have created new design possibilities for architects and decorators.

Hardwood flooring is an investment which adds to the resale value of a house. Carpet and linoleum wear out and must be replaced, but with proper care and maintenance hardwood flooring becomes more beautiful with age and lasts a lifetime.

From the basement recreation room to the formal living room, at Welch-Luther Lumber there is hardwood flooring to suit every decor and to fit every budget. Available are displays of all major prefinished floors such as: Bruce, Hartco, Anderson, Kentucky Wood, Harris-Tarkett, and others.

Welch Luther Co. provides technical advice in selecting the proper flooring for the job at hand. For example, in basements, where the floor is below the level of the outside ground line, only laminated hardwood flooring should be used.

In addition, there is a broad range of do-it-yourself products—for the novice or the experienced handyman.

For the novice, for example, we have Bruce Hardwood Floors 12"x12" parquet tiles with a long lasting factory applied urethane finish and a self-sticking back, available in several shades, from natural to dark walnut.

For the more experienced handyman, we have both glue-down and nail-down products in a variety of colors, finishes, and patterns.

Installation is also available with every type of wood flooring, from the simplest oak strip to the "floating floor system" as seen on T.V. on "This Old House."

Sanding, custom staining, and finishing services are also offered. We use a wide variety of finishes, including polyurethanes, moisture curing urethanes, Swedish finishes, and the new water-based polyurethanes, which are non-toxic.

If you are thinking of purchasing new floor coverings, consider hardwood flooring—it is an investment for a lifetime. Visit our showroom or give us a call. We will come to your home and give you a free, no obligation, written estimate. We offer your product knowledge, competitive pricing, skilled installers and finishers who are fully insured, and prompt, on-time, service—a combination which will make your purchase and installation fast, clean, and trouble-free.

Northern White Cedar Fences

By East Coast Fence of Kingston

The best fences are built of Northern White Cedar because it combines durability and versatility. White Cedar heartwood is extremely resistant to decay and termites, even when used in close proximity to the ground. This is a natural resistance and usually no further treatment of the cedar is necessary.

Northern White Cedar's combination of durability, and handsome grain and texture, gives the user a wide selection of finishes to choose from. A cedar fence can be left unfinished, to weatherbleach naturally to a beautiful silvery gray or the fence can be stained different colors to add contrast to the landscaping.

A fence can protect your property or garden from the neighborhood wildlife and children, or it can keep your children and pets in the yard so you know where they are.

You can use a fence as a space divider; to define an outdoor living area, or to screen a service yard. A

A Good home in Randolph has an artist's look

By Ellen Nagle
Mariner Correspondent

Have you ever driven past an interesting and unique house so often that you find yourself imagining how the interior is decorated and what the people who live there might be like?

Well, for the past ten years I have been doing just that, with a house in Randolph on the corner of Center St. and Greenmount Ave.

This house first captured my attention not because it was outstanding for its perfectly manicured lawns on a street with rows of exceptionally well tended yards, but rather because it was nestled, with its own unique design, among the trees on a wooded lot, and seemed not to intrude, but to belong and become a natural part of the landscape.

This home which features a large glass dome in the roof's center has an enormous amount of large windows which truly open up the house. Sometimes when driving past this home at dusk, I would seem to catch a glimpse of what appeared to be an artist at work, in the main room of the dwelling.

Luckily I have now been fortunate enough to visit this home and meet the occupants of this dwelling. My imagination as to who might live there and what the homes interior would look like were remarkably similar to what my mind's eye had pictured.

This home is owned by David and Mary Good. Many Randolph residents will recognize the name of Good as being associated with a number of community organizations as well as the business of the Good Brothers Ford dealership which is visible from the Good's living room, and just a short walk away.

David and Mary Good have five children and an adorable family dog named McDuff. The Goods have enjoyed life in this home for the past ten years. The house is structurally an acorn design with diagonal beams supporting and an eight foot square sky dome, in the center of the house.

As a result of the diagonal beam feature, the Good's were able to use their creativity within their living area and chose to keep the main floor very open, with no walls separating the kitchen from the dining and living areas. The extensive use of glass makes you feel that you are actually out in the woods although you are in fact very well protected indoors from all the elements.

This is great because Mrs. Good claims that she has always wanted to live in a tree house and with the design of her house she can now have the best of both worlds, her fantasy and of course, reality. Her wish is certainly fulfilled with this being a most lovely and comfortable "tree house".

The large sky dome enables the Goods to witness some very interesting weather phenomena when a thunderstorm or snowstorm occurs. The home also features solar panels for hot water. Shortly after they moved in the Goods were part of an experimental group for the use of solar panels.

Otherwise the house is totally electric, including heat.

The fleeting glimpses from my car at what appeared to be an artist at work, were correct. Mary Good is an accomplished artist who is a member of the Randolph Art Assoc. and the Brockton Art Museum. Approximately eighteen months ago the Good's constructed a studio for Mary on their property, complete with sky domes for proper lighting.

Until this time Mary did much of her work under the sky dome in their living area. Mrs. Good conducts private, semi private and group lessons in her studio. She also teaches drawing and painting two days a week in Northeastern at Oaks-Ames Memorial.

Mrs. Good is a Neo-realist who specializes in portraiture. She received her bachelors degree in art education from Mass. Art and went on to complete her masters degree in fine arts at S.M.U.

Mrs. Good has had many showings of her remarkable talents in portraiture, which she completes in charcoal from photographs she has taken. She will have her next major exhibition in June of 1987 at the Bromfield Gallery, an artists cooperative in Boston. This exhibit will feature twelve portraits of women in their eighties.

My visit with the Goods was a wonderful experience. This home which has intrigued me for years is certainly well suited for the enormous talents of Mary Good.

In addition to the upcoming exhibit, the Goods have another major event to look forward to—the birth of their eighth grandchild, expected very close to Thanksgiving.

The Good livingroom in Randolph is full of light, music and art.

The latest advances in latex paint

By Nina Goodrich
President, Goodrich Lumber of Duxbury

The best news for do-it-yourself painters is new advances in latex paint.

Recent technical changes in latex emulsions based on knowledge transferred from the plastics industry have refined latex bases to the point where they rival oil based paints in performance.

Quality latex paint such as Martin Senour and Williamsburg will go on smoothly, cover well, wear beautifully, and clean up easily.

These latex paints can be applied over oil based primers and existing oil base paints. Latex paint is odorless, nonflammable, quick drying, and cleans with water.

The manufacture of paint has recently come under environmental guidelines which favor water based paint over solvent based paint manufacture. These guidelines will further enhance the progress of technology aimed at improving water based paint manufacture, application methods and tools.

Paint performance can be enhanced by proper surface preparation. Surfaces should be clear of: dirt, grease, loose paint and other water soluable materials.

A primer should be used on bare wood. Loose paint often indicates that moisture has been trapped beneath the surface.

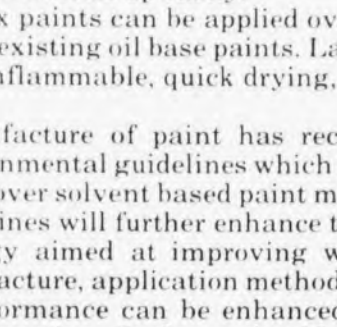
The paint chips should be removed and the cause of the moisture determined and corrected.

All cracks and holes should be repaired. Time spent in preparation will result in a much nicer job.

Quality is a very important factor in selecting the proper paint. "Bargain" products do not always turn out to be less expensive. A good quality paint will adhere, flow and cover better than one of a lesser quality. A homeowner should take into account thedesired results, the performance factors of the paint and the value of their labor in addition to price when reviewing the total cost of a project.

Martin Senour and Williamsburg products are high quality paints which are easy to use and contribute to high quality results for the do-it-yourselfer.

Goodrich Lumber is happy to answer questions on interior and exterior use of Martin Senour products.



The front wall of a Hanover room owned by Gail and Joe Polsinello has a round stained glass window with a flying duck design.

Building No. 8 - The tradition continues

After almost 20 years of serving the South Shore from their location at the Old Hingham Shipyard, the Andler family has moved their operation to a newer modern facility just off Routes 3 and 53 in Hanover.

Once a mixed bag of home improvement materials, Building #8 now specializes in remodeling materials for the kitchen and bath. Cabinetry is available for almost any decor from colonial to traditional and European designs, using both selected hardwoods and laminates. Countertops are custom designed utilizing the latest materials including color-thru laminates and the new hi-tech stonelike materials.

"Although most of our customers are from the South Shore area, we have many who travel from around the New England region to take advantage of our services", remarks Richie Andler, manager of the operation.

"We have designed and supplied kitchens and baths that have been installed in Alaska, Ireland, Italy, and other distant locations. Our customers quickly become our friends not only because of our pricing and selection but also because they know we really care about how their project works out."

The selection has been increased since the move to Hanover, but not much else has changed excepting the surroundings. The new store isn't fancy but it has made a hit with the customers. It is much safer to get to than the Hingham location. The showroom is well-lit and comfortable to browse through.

"Having been in one place for as long as we were in Hingham, there is a lot of detail to getting the new location completed to the last detail, but we hope to have everything finished by July," noted Richie.

"We are thankful for the interest and confidence that our many friends have shown us over the past few months, and we are excited about the future."

When one walks into Building #8, piles of boxes are the greeting as new products and displays are arriving everyday.

Well planned landscaping: both beauty and function

By Steven R. Tomasi, ASLA
Registered Landscape Architect

Does your home look like a box that's been dropped from the sky onto a piece of ground? I hope not. Is there no transition and harmony between the building architecture and the outdoor spaces? There should be. Do your landscape plantings create a marriage between your home and the land? If they don't, they should.

When you think of it, with an average size building lot of 30,000 square feet, most home dwellers have spent 90 percent of their time into something that only occupies about 10 percent of the space, namely the house. We sometimes "leave the landscape to the end", and let it form as it may, usually only giving it minor attention and sometimes even an impromptu approach by making "weekend" decisions on a permanent part of the property that should last as long as the house.

The landscape, including the topography, walks, walls (if necessary), patio spaces and garden spaces should receive the same level of design concentration as you gave your home's architecture and room layout. A well planned aesthetically pleasing outdoor environment can easily make a home look many times its value, and conversely a poor planned landscape can "depreciate" the appearance of a very expensive home.

Putting beauty aside for the moment, what are some of the reasons for investing in a landscape planting? Functional aspects of plants are very important. The screening of an unsightly view or blockage of noise or dust from a busy street may be needed. Certainly a "living fence or screen" can accomplish this.

Do you have a problem area on your property with regards to soil or wind erosion? Properly planted species can control and curb this problem. Is there an area on the grounds that because of a lack of sunlight, grass just will not grow?

Certain species of ground covers will do just fine in areas like this and add some interest and change in the ground plane at the same time. Or maybe you just want some good old fashioned privacy in this high tech world we live in to create your own little oasis.

Attraction of wildlife is another reason that many gardeners are considering today. Habitation for birds and the enjoyment that they return are a nice dividend for your investment. Fruit bearing trees and shrubbery can provide necessary food during the late Fall and Winter months. And a bit of a water feature in the landscape can be just the morning splash birds need and a drink of water for squirrels and the like.

The energy conservation aspects of vegetation are sometimes overlooked. For instance, an evergreen hedge may be just the thing to block severe northwest winds from robbing precious energy from your house in the Winter. And, a shade tree can be a natural air conditioner when situated on the southeast section near your home as it will block the severe heat and cast a cool shade on your house to help cool it. And when we want that heat to reflect off our homes during the Winter, the tree's leaves have all fallen and allowed that solar radiation to penetrate.

The creation of space is another aspect of plant materials we often overlook. Trees themselves can provide a canopy or "roof like" feel to a quiet garden retreat and proper use of shrubs can create the definitive "walls" that enclose, either fully or partially, the outdoor room we desire.

If an exceptional view is part of your property, either on site or far off site, such as a cranberry bog, a small island off the bay or pond, or maybe a piece of sculpture in the garden, you are very lucky. But why not enhance that view to create a "vista" to possible enframe or set it off with plant materials. You will then really appreciate what a beautiful view you have.

Each landscape should be in total harmony with the style of building architecture and certainly be a reflection of the dwellers. One major point to consider when planning a landscape is sequence and continuity of color, whether it be in the form of flower, fruit or foliage.

We sometimes forget that there are 48 more weeks in the year other than the four floriferous weeks of May and we can attain color as early as mid-March right up to the first frost in the Fall.

Color schemes are very important to consider just as you have coordinated your interior color schemes. Outdoor colors should also blend and form a nice subtle mix with each other, with the house and with all surroundings.

One point I like to make is that the planning stage is just as critical as the planting stage. It is a lot easier to change one's mind on paper and erase, than it is to transplant after landscape elements are installed.

If the style of the home reflects a contemporary nature then the landscape should follow suit, and the same applies to the colonial style homes, ones with a Williamsburg feel, and farm like settings utilizing native species.

A rose cutting garden would be a great addition if it is your hobby and you like to work in the garden, but not for a home owner who desires low maintenance. You should be comfortable with the maintenance aspects that your outdoor environment requires.

Often people when on a Sunday drive looking at homes will spot a breath-taking property and say "what a beautiful home". But it is often the landscape setting and the way the home is nestled into it, combined with the architecture that they admire. In reality the beauty is not in the home alone.

By seeking proper advice and spending the necessary time during the planning stage, your property too can be a functional and beautiful environment in your own little piece of the world.

The Dragons house is eligible for a house tour

By Claire McDonough
Mariner Correspondent

The Dragon smiled down from his perch at the top of a step ladder.

"Hi," he smiled, waving a jaunty paint brush, "pull up a drop sheet and we can chat."

I stepped over a tray and roller, dodged stray drops of beige paint that were dripping from his sleeve, and looked up.

"What inspired this burst of energy?" I asked suspiciously.

He sighed patiently and gave me a look usually reserved for extremely slow learners.

"We can't be on the House Tour with dingy paint, can we?"

"Are you out of your mind?" I asked rhetorically. "What makes you think we're on the House Tour?"

"Why not?" he responded, grandly waving his brush at all he surveyed. "People will probably pay big bucks to see where I live. Not every house has its resident dragon."

"What are you going to show them," I snapped. "The holes you burned in the living room upholstery? The overflowing ashtray on your desk? The ashes on your desk that aren't anywhere near an ashtray? The microwave that's full of gunk because the instructions you read said to take the frozen entree out of the foil tray, but it didn't say to put it on a dish, so you didn't, and it defrosted all over the oven? And there are lots of other splendors you can display and there are lots of other splendours you can display to the teeming throngs that want to look at your lair."

"Sure," he replied equably. "But since you're my biographer, maybe they'd like to see some of your stuff. And speaking of desks, I can show them yours. With the pile of papers you keep saying you're going to sort out some day. Some of them are so old they were written with a quill."

I shrugged. "Okay, so some of them are, um, pre-war. I'll take care of them any day now."

"Pre-war is one thing," the Dragon chortled. "But your stuff predates the Battle of Hastings. And how about your 'mystery closet' that nobody knows what's inside because you don't dare open it because if you do you can't shut it again?"

"Hey, wait," Breida interjected, "I don't know whether you're serious about putting this place on the House Tour. But I want one thing clearly understood. My room is off limits. To everyone."

Skip grinned. "I agree. Making people look at Breida's room could be rough on people with weak hearts. It might be a good place to send alcoholics, though. What with the live guinea pig and all, they might think they're halucinating and take the pledge for life."

Breida sniffed. "Are we to assume that your room is so neat that you're willing to throw your door open to anyone who passes by? Do you think they'll believe that the fungus growing under your bed is really a scientific mushroom farm? And don't tell me if I stayed out of your room I wouldn't know about the fungus. Ma made me look under your bed for glasses and coffee cups. Personally, I'd rather die than do it willingly."

I decided to try reason.

"Look," I told the Dragon, "We can't be on the House Tour. Do you really think it's appropriate to put a house with burned upholstery, gunk in the microwave, ashes everywhere, piles of papers on a desk, a killer closet, a live guinea pig in one bedroom and fungus in another on the House Tour?"

He thought for a minute. "No. But can you get in touch with Robert Urich or Brook Avery? I think we're ready for "Spencer for Hire."

White cedar fence

fence can be a handsome backdrop for plantings, and help set just the right mood for the entire garden.

Architecturally, a fence can be a picture frame for the home setting; or it can complement the house and make it look larger. To a homeowner, the most important physical qualities of cedar are the ones that save him the most money.

Chief among these is cedar's durability, which enables the material to be used anywhere in the garden with assurance of long-lasting, trouble-free performances.

The natural color, textures, and grain patterns of cedar are attractive and interesting. Cedar harmonizes with other materials, and all types of architecture. Above all, cedar is a natural material at home in a garden setting.

If you add on to your home, call the building inspector

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

Obtaining official permission to build an addition onto your home is not as difficult as getting the necessary permits to build a new house.

The most-advisable first step is to contact the building inspector in your town. Also, plan on going before the local board of health unless the addition clearly cannot be used as a bedroom — such as a garage, breezeway, and kitchens in some cases.

The health board is a logical step, local inspectors say, because it must verify whether your septic system is large enough for additional occupants of the home. All homes are certified for a certain number of occupants when the town issues an occupancy permit.

"If the room could in any way be used as a bedroom, the board of health must approve to make sure the septic system is big enough," said Hanover Building Inspector Arthur M. Capaccioli.

"They ensure that you have an adequate septic system."

The above does not apply, of course, if the home is located in an area with sewers.

Building inspectors can also tell homeowners if they will need approval from another local board, the conservation commission. ConCom hearings are triggered when the home — or any potential addition — is located within 100 feet of a wetland.

Wetands in Massachusetts feed groundwater, which supplies over half of the state's drinking water. Conservation commissions were established in each municipality to protect local wetlands, which need not be wet all the time in order to be protected under the state's Wetlands Protection Act.

ConComs issue two major types of rulings: an Order of Conditions or a Determination of Applicability.

These terms need not sound frightening. An order is issued where construction will occur near a well-defined wetland. A determination is used when officials question whether the wetland area qualifies for protection under the act.

Don't ignore the importance of hearings before either local agency if required. A stop-work order, enforceable in court, can be issued if construction begins without proper authorization.

A variance from the appeals board may also be

Do you need a new roof?
How old is your roof? If it's more than ten years old, it's high time to give it a close inspection. Because 15 years is about as long as most roofs can be expected to function and not look shabby.
The concentrated heat of the sun, rain, snow, sleet, gusty winds and just time alone can make shingles dry and brittle, rob a roof of its protective qualities. Let us give your roof a thorough check-up, inspect all potential trouble spots. It could save you a bundle—because a faulty roof soon leaks, and leaks can be expensive. If your roof just needs repair, we'll tell you. If you need a new roof, we'll be happy to advise you and give you a free estimate.

The building permit process. . .

necessary if the planned addition comes closer to lot lines than zoning ordinances allow.

In most cases, additions will come closer to side lot lines than to the front or back of the property. Side "setback" requirements in most cases are at least 10 or 20 feet, while many communities call for front and rear setbacks of around 50 feet.

Again, the building inspector can advise homeowners about such requirements. Capaccioli and Pembroke inspector Albert Cain also serve as the towns' zoning enforcement officers.

"We can't issue a variance — only the appeals board can do that," Cappacioli said.

In some cases, he said, the variance requirement can be waived by inspectors if the addition falls short of one of the setback requirements — but only if there is compensating space or the opposite side of the yard.

"If most houses are 30 feet from the street and your addition will bring it to 25 feet," Capaccioli said, "I might be able to approve it if setback in the rear of the lot is at least five feet over the requirement."

The local building office in town halls can also tell you if your house is located in a specially-protected area, such as an historic district. Hearings before such committees may also be required.

Since they lack experience with local government, residents may sometimes feel initmidated by the hearing process. It may help to remember, though, that most people who serve on regulatory boards are citizen volunteers with a sense of civic duty. In every sense, they are your neighbors.

Once any question of approval by boards is cleared up, building inspectors will want to see a plot plan of the addition. Both inspectors said architect's blueprints aren't necessary for most plans; however, any plan submitted must show structural details, a floor plan and a side elevation of the project.

This general contractor once worked for the F.B.I.

Although Edward Goff, PRC, is only in his mid-30's, when you add up the number of years he and his crew have had in installing and repairing roofs, the figure comes to a staggering 131 years of experience.

Ed is the owner/operator of the Edward F. Goff Company, Inc. of Cohasset, a general contractor, specializing in the sale and installation of a variety of exterior products for the home, including roofing, siding and accessories, insulation, replacement windows and porch additions.

Twelve years ago, when Ed graduated from Boston's Suffolk University, he was recruited into the FBI, for agent training.

But after serving two years, and with the prospect of constant moving around the country, he quickly saw more stability working for his newly acquired and very successful father-in-law in the home contracting business in Quincy, the Frank Evans Company.

Although only serving two years with the FBI, he succeeded in earning one of the Bureau's coveted letters of commendation from then Director J. Edgar Hoover, presented to him for his part in the apprehension of a murder suspect.

For the following five years, however, Ed Goff made it a point to learn as much about his father-in-law's business as he could.

According to Ed, "He was a great teacher. He knew, and had mastered the business of home contracting, and was understanding and accommodating in passing his expertise on to me."

Goff stands with his job sign at a Hingham job site.

Approximately five years ago, Ed and his wife, Jane, moved to Cohasset to start a similar business in that community and surrounding area. He wasted little time in finding employees with experience and those who were enthusiastic about the kind of business they were in. Since then, Ed's business has grown steadily each year, but not without "...hard work and long hours." Ed's principal supplier of materials is Harvey industries.

With the total number of years experience Ed and his crew have had in roofing, he was pleased to see that Bird wanted to recognize and promote professionalism within the industry, by certifying qualified roofing contractors.

Ed's commitment to being a Professional Roofing Contractor overlaps in his involvement in community service. He has served on the Board of Directors of the Cohasset Community Center for three years; is a former First Vice President and currently a member of the Board of Directors of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, and is President-Elect of the Cohasset Rotary Club.

Remarking on his career, Ed said, "Becoming successful in this business, you have to be willing to do what the next guy won't bother with. You have to be different. After-the-job servicing is an important part of my business, as is making myself easily accessible to the homeowner/prospect. Job referrals are important. They confirm your credibility as a professional, making it easier to sell. That's why I'm so pleased with the Bird PRC Program. We are being given the stamp of a professional which many of us are."

Over 45 squares of Bird's new Brushed Series solid vinyl siding were used to restore this New England two-story structure. Originally a residence, the building now houses a gift shop and beauty salon on the first floor and four apartments on the second.

Goff said, "This was a difficult building to capture due to its combined colonial/victorian architecture and the tremendous amount of ornate trim." It took three applicators six weeks to complete the job in October.

Goff, certified by Bird's Roofing and Vinyl Divisions, has owned his own remodeling business in Cohasset for seven years. The owners of the first floor gift shop, Cards & Shards, admired his siding work on another local project and hired him based on the excellent craftsmanship and materials used on that job.

Goff said he uses Bird vinyl siding exclusively because it is the most authentic looking vinyl—"it looks like brand new wood"—and because it is easy to work with, "even in cold weather." Bird's vinyl accessories, soffit and shutters were also applied.

May is the perfect time to schedule a garden tour

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

In May, blossoms come to life after the sleep of winter.

It's the perfect month for showing off nature's talents. That's why the Garden Club of Hingham decided it was the perfect time to schedule a special flower show. And this year's Standard Flower Show offers even more.

For the first time, the Garden Club will hold a flower show combined with a house and garden tour. It's quite an ambitious project, according to program chairman, Mrs. Stuart G. Hall.

"But it's going to be terrific!" she promised.

The Standard Flower Show and Garden Tour will be held Wed., May 21 from 1 to 8:30 p.m. Tickets for the show and tour are on sale at the Hingham Public Library and the Hingham Square Bookshop.

"It's taken an entire year of work," Hall explained. "Seventy five women have been working on the show for the past year, just deciding what homes would be on the tour. We didn't want to conflict in any way with the Hingham Historical Society's tour. Ours is an entirely different concept. It's an ambitious flower show which must conform to very strict requirements, combined with a tour of five beautiful homes."

A Standard Flower Show is an official title designating a show which must conform to standards established by the national Council of State Garden Clubs. There will be panels of 15 judges observing the work of the Hingham club in the five homes and gardens. There are six divisions of work by the members which will be rated according to various classes by the nationally-recognized judges.

The flower show is entitled, "Window on the World." It is an international theme in which the flower arrangements will represent the various countries. And to ensure authenticity, each flower arrangement and display must be made in front of the judges the day before, and the morning of the flower show. This is no easy project, Hall emphasized.

The six divisions within the Standard Flower Show will include designs in conjunction with the theme, "Around the World in Eighty Days." The second division is small patio garden with the theme "It's a Wonderful World." The third theme, "We are the World" will contain the horticulture exhibit, and the fourth exhibit, education, will follow the theme of "It's a Small World." The fifth division which will include a design, horticulture, and educational exhibit by the junior gardeners of Girl Scout Troop 4460, which will follow the theme, "Love Makes the World Go Round." The final theme, "He's Got the Whole World in His Hands," will include the club's state and national objectives.

"It's a very technical production," Hall noted. "But it's all very beautiful. Within the restrictions of rules and regulations, we hope to make this a very beautiful show that people will want to observe.

"Everyone of the club members took this project very seriously. One gal recently went to Switzerland on vacation and said that all she thought about was the arrangement she was going to make when she got back!"

Each of the five elegant homes selected for the tour work well within the individual international themes of the Standard Flower Show, she continued. Four of the homes are within walking distance near the Hingham Square area. The final home on the tour will provide a unique aspect to the entire show.

This antique home, Hall noted, will include the owners' collection of miniatures they have bought and made for many years. It is an incredible site, she stated, which includes a miniature shopping mall, homes, rooms, furniture and dishes. One little greenhouse even contains miniature potted plants and dried flower arrangements. "This home alone is worth the price of admission," Hall laughed.

In addition to the flower exhibits by the junior gardeners at this home, patrons will have an opportunity to view the owner's talent in needlework. "Her work will be on display," Hall said. "And it's really incredible."

The garden exhibit at this house will be spectacular, she promised. "It's a gorgeous arrangement," the chairman noted. "It's been so beautifully staged. And the Girl Scouts, under the direction of Nancy Reid, have worked diligently on this. They began their plants from seedlings."

Another interesting facet of the show will be the horticulture exhibit, she explained. "Some of the members will be exhibiting potted plants they've had for years. One interesting plant was actually propagated from a plant owned by a former club member, Hart Day. It's a beautiful plant that has given us continuity from one member to another."

The tint retention of high gloss acrylic latex paint highlights a front door.

High gloss acrylic latex, a painting option

For anyone who has ever put a brush to paint, there is welcome news about a new product that combines the advantages of oil-based and latex paints.

This new type of paint, high gloss acrylic latex, offers consumers the lustrous, glossy appearance that formerly was available only with oil-based paint. It also offers the easy soap-and-water cleanup common to other latex paint products.

Inside the home, high gloss acrylic latex paint can be used wherever you'd like to have a high gloss look. But it is an especially good choice for high activity areas like playrooms, kitchens, bathrooms and busy corridors, since it maintains its attractive appearance even when subjected to repeated scrubbings.

Outdoors, the paint's tough durability makes it the ideal selection for windows, doors, shutters and decks exposed to intense sun, humidity, and other harsh elements. The high gloss acrylic latex will not peel, crack, blister or discolor years after finishing the job.

And regardless of whether you are a dedicated do-it-yourselfer or just a "weekend handyman," high gloss acrylic latex paint will make it easier to complete and clean up after any painting project you tackle.

Unlike oil-based paints, high gloss acrylic latex will not take hours to dry once it is applied. You won't need to purchase turpentine or other costly solvents to clean up the job, since soap and water will wash it free from brushes or hands. And high gloss acrylic latex paint gives off none of the odorous fumes that come with some oil-based paints.

The reflective beauty of high gloss acrylic latex paint lends a bright distinction to furniture pieces.

Hingham Flower & Garden May tour...

One home will typify a pre-World War I house with an elegant poolside patio garden. The next home on the tour will feature a more modern carefree patio. A third house tour home will include an interesting garden with a multitude of exotic plants such as a cork tree, a Kentucky coffee bean tree and a pair of Chinese wisterias.

The horticultural exhibits will be stage within designated rooms of the fourth home. Perfection in coordination is the balance the club members attempt to achieve in this gracious, wood-paneled home.

As Hall explained, each home has a distinct personality because of the particular style and the personality of the owners. The flower arrangements and garden exhibits will serve to enhance the personality of the individual home.

"It's going to be a sensational show and house tour," she said. "These five homes have never been on a tour before. And four of the homes are within easy walking distance. That fifth home, the antique, is so different from the others it will be worth the travel. That is a very special home. I'm so glad we were able to include it in our show."

The Standard Flower Show combined with a house tour, is a "once in a lifetime," type of project.

"Because of all the rigid rules and regulations, the flower show is usually done in one exhibition area,' Hall explained. "But we decided to be adventurous and combine it with this wonderful house tour. It's been a lot of work for seventy five very active members. But I know the public will appreciate what we've accomplished."

The last time the Garden Club of Hingham sponsored a Standard Flower Show was four years ago. "This year's show is far more ambitious — it's a double-headed undertaking! But it will be great for the visitors who will get twice as much.

As program chairman, Hall has literally spent the past year on the telephone, she said, recalling how she has become adept at cooking dinner with a telephone faceted atop her shoulder.

"Just to let you understand how this project has consumed my life," she explained, "my son called to tell us he was getting married May 17. Instead of saying, "that's terrific,' I almost said 'you can't get married then — the flower show!' God must have stopped me from saying such a stupid thing. But the truth is, my husband, myself and my other son will have to fly down that Friday morning for rehearsal, attend the wedding Saturday and skip the Sunday brunch so we can get back to Hingham Sunday night. I have so much work to finish for the show.

Tickets are on sale at the library and bookstore. There may be tickets available the day of the show, although the number will be limited. People who wait until that time may be disappointed, Hall added.

"I hope everyone will enjoy and appreciate this show as much as we do," she stated. "It's been the best work we've ever done. And we've all worked so hard!"

Maguire Floorcovering turns the corner

By Ed Maguire
Owner, E.F. Maguire Floorcovering of Hanover

E.F. Maguire Floorcovering celebrates 15 years in the flooring business this June.

Edward Maguire, the owner, was a manufacturer representative for seven years prior to starting E.F. Maguire Company in 1971.

His early years were spent carpeting mostly commercial buildings in the Eastern Massachusetts area.

Operating from an office in his home and a rented warehouse in Weymouth, he carpeted many large buildings in this area. In 1977 he added linoleum to his line and ceramic tile was added three years later.

The residential housing slump during the early 1980's caused many contractors to switch to commercial construction and E.F. Maguire Floorcovering became a source for all their flooring needs.

After the residential market improved many of these same contractors asked Maguire if he would also do their residential floors because they were pleased with the quality workmanship which is completed on schedule at a reasonable price.

The gradual increase in residential business made it apparent to Ed Maguire that he needed larger quarters than the area he had been renting.

He wanted to combine a showroom for builders and clients to be able to see samples at their leisure as well as a larger warehouse facility to be able to take greater advantage of "mill specials" which were known to him from his years as a manufacturer representative.

He opened his new facility in January 1985 and has experienced tremendous growth in just one year.

Maguire and his staff are committed to offering superior service and quality products at very competitive prices. They have selected carpets and tiles that are unique and are not available through other South Shore outlets.

Many designers use their showroom to bring clients because they have products that can usually only be found in the decorator's centers in Boston.

This image has caused a substantial increase in new residential business from contractors, architects, and decorators who have come to know that high quality products at reasonable prices can be found at E.F. Maguire Floorcovering.

From the Garden

by Joan Pinkham

If you are starting your first garden, keep in mind that one of the most important factors in its success is planning.

Before you even put spade to earth, choosing the right spot is of utmost importance.

Considerations in selecting the correct site for a vegetable garden include: six to eight hours of direct sunlight a day; good drainage and good quality soil; a nearby water supply and protection from strong winds.

Remember that midday sun is best and if your garden receives full sun from midmorning until midafternoon, it can get by with fewer hours of sun.

If there is too much shade caused by large trees and shrubs, they will have to be pruned or removed. The latter is rather costly—one large oak sawed down and removed from your property can cost several hundred dollars, so perhaps it's best tc choose shade-loving crops such as lettuce or cabbage.

If you are new to our South Shore you will find May is pink lady slippers, swallows, warblers, black flies and east winds that can turn a sunny day cool. It's a festival of blossoms—white, lavendar and heavenly pink. The Romans called it "the growing month." We call it "heaven." Even our house plants benefit from a summer in the great outdoors, but nights are still cold, so best to wait a few weeks before setting out pots of cacti, geraniums, crown of thorns, ivy—most everything except African violets and philodendron. House plants will suffer less from shock if you harden them off gradually by first finding a sheltered spot where there is shade or filtered sun.

The more birds a yard can support, the fewer insects there will be to trouble the gardener. By early June the "Big Parade" will be over until that still mysterious migratory urge turns the birds around and sends them south in the fall.

When they settle down at nest-building time, birds are apt to show less interest in your feeders, but you can encourage some birds to stay and raise a family in your garden by setting out a few bird houses. Chickadees, downy woodpeckers, robins, nuthatches, wrens and song sparrows will live near a house if the garden has thickets of trees, shrubs and fruit trees—how they love cherries, your prized blueberries and raspberries!

It's all too easy to succumb to spring fever sitting around admiring your tulips, daffodils and hyacinths and picking a few blossoms to enjoy indoors. Don't take any leaves along with the flowers.

Leaves and flower stems should not be removed until they turn yellowish-green. The healthier the foliage, the more food it will produce and the better will be next year's flowers.

One way to get ideas for the landscaping of your new home is to peek in on other gardens.

Hingham is noted for its handsome homes, some of which will be open to the public on May 21 when the Garden Club of Hingham has planned a house and garden tour. Mrs. Stuart Hall is chairman of the show and tickets may be purchased from members, at the Hingham Public Library and the Hingham Square Bookshop.

Those interested in orchids are invited to call John Gilman, 585-2002. He is expecting to add to his collection with species from China and New Zealand this month.

The 16th annual Rhododendron Flower Show and Auction will be held on Sunday, May 25 at the experiment station of the U. of Mass., 240 Beaver St.. Waltham from 10 to 4 p.m.

A Japanese flowering quince.

They have day-long workshops and many bargains will be available; also a catered food table.

A plant sale by the Hanover Garden Club will be held May 17 and flower show and tour May 20 by the Duxbury Garden Club—all so tempting, you won't have time to plant your own petunias.

No need to glance at a calendar when just outside the window the cardinals flit among the maple buds that are unfurling while the lilac and apple blossoms fill the air with the scent of May. A good date to keep in mind is that of May 16 when John Hassett will lead the annual Rosella Ames bird walk through Marshfield. Birders will meet at the town hall at 9 a.m. to look for warblers, orioles, yellowthroats and down along the shore, double-crested cormorants. You might even spot a piping plover, an endangered species which David Clapp saw one foggy morning in April while birding out on Third Cliff.

Taking along your treasured houseplants may present a problem when moving. Buying new plants can run into a lot of money these days, yet you'll want some greenery around the new place to make it seem more like home. The solution? Take several good clippings from your plants, wrap them in wet paper towels and seal them in plastic containers. The cuttings will stay healthy for several days if kept in a cool place.

Lucky indeed are nature-lovers, for there is a Mass. Audubon Society headquarters on Rte. 3A in Marshfield Hills where a friendly staff will answer all your questions and offers programs galore. On May 16 at 6 p.m. they will join other sanctuaries across the state in its fourth annual Bird-A-Thon, a fun competition for the novice and serious birder alike. Everyone will fan out across the state in search of record numbers of bird species. Individuals sponsor the teams and pledge money for each species recorded. Call them if you can join them.

If you don't have a yard, or if there's not room for a garden, try turning your patio or apartment balcony into a garden with container plantings. Containers may be made into miniature gardens of vegetables or flowers by planting seeds about now and when the weather gets cold, you can move your "garden" inside.

Friends & family lend support to a native son

It was the family homestead, filled with children and a mother who struggled to feed and clothe her seven offspring.

With the children grown, and many living away from home, Mary Ann Sweeney was taken away from her beloved home when a fire destroyed it in 1969.

She moved to San Diego to be with her youngest child, Walter and his wife, Nancy. Mary Ann died in 1972.

The rise and fall of big Walt Sweeney's professional football career has been well documented. With his sports career finished, he and his wife decided in 1983 to pick up the pieces of their life back home.

His friends rejoiced. "To see how this guy has started all over - from the alcohol and drugs to where he is today, is incredible. He's a great example for all of us," high school classmate Clark Chatterton said.

But his homecoming has been darkened. Local health board officials decided last week the home he and Nancy planned to rebuild will not be allowed.

Their only option now, according to a dejected Sweeney, is to spend more money on lawyers and engineers and haul the town into court.

"This is the last thing I wanted to do when we decided to come back to Cohasset," he said from the Summer reading program OK'd

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Summer illiteracy will no longer be a black mark blotching the records of non-reading, vacationing Cohasset students.

William Kite, head of the high school English department presented a revised summer reading plan Monday afternoon to the Cohasset School Committee.

He explained many students still tend to "lose" their summer reading lists in school wastebaskets on the last day of class and the English department would like to "tighten up" summer reading requirements for students in grades 7-12.

Kite said his department would require students to read two books during the summer and write or present reports on the literature when school resumes in the fall.

He told the committee the old plan discriminated against students who enter the school system late in the summer. "In fairness to the late-coming students," he said, "we would like to continue the program, but make it extra credit so students who come in late aren't penalized."

ConCom concerned with Scituate plan

A proposed 30-house development in Scituate may affect the Cohasset water supply the conservation commission said Tuesday night.

Drainage plans for Indian Winds development on Summer Street in Scituate include an underground piping system that would direct the water into Cohasset's Lily Pond, the commission reported.

The Cohasset conservation commission will attend a hearing of the Scituate planning board, May 27, on the proposal prepared by Teebagy Associates of Hanover for developer, Walter Winchester.

The commission will invite former water commissioner Peter Pratt to discuss his proposal of creating a landbank with the levy of a tax on the purchase of a home.

The idea was proposed as a result of the town's desire to take the land around Lily Pond by eminent domain. The new tax would create an account for the town to use in the purchase of such lands.

The assessment was believe to be at .5 percent of the sale price of the house.

"I'm against it," commissioner Austin O'Toole said, "It's another burden on the backs of young people trying to find a home."

In other business the commission

-accepted with regrets the resignation of Bob Maki.

-requested to be shown the exact location of a proposed swimming pool at the Belarmine House on Howard Gleason Road. According to the plans submitted to the Commission the pool will be installed on a cliff, 42 feet above the benchmark at Harmony Road.

-approved permit applications to Austin O'Toole at 13 Haystack Lane to convert the upstairs of a garage into a guest house.

-approved a permit application for a second addition to the home of Fritz and Alice Meulhaupt at 266 Forest Avenue.

Parish gives direction: lights, camera, action!

Some people think Cohasset doesn't have a prayer.

But members of the First Parish Church believe their meeting house will be a central location for the movie "The Witches of Eastwick."

The Massachusetts Film Bureau has not received confirmation or rejection about the use of Cohasset or Hingham sites in the film to be produced by Warner Brothers.

But Rev. Edward Atkinson said he expects to see a contract from the film executives this week. He has talked with members of his congregation, and their reaction to the use of the meeting house for location shots has been "very positive," Rev. Atkinson stated.

"From what I understand," he continued, "their other choice in Little Compton, R.I. turned down a request to film there.

"Officials at Warner Brothers said Cohasset was still a prime location. Several people have called me saying they'd like to use the common and our church. They wanted to know our feelings about it."

As a result of conversations with the Hollywood execs, Rev. Atkinson read through the John Updike novel on which the film will be based. Although he considers Updike a brilliant novelist, Rev. Atkinson found his use of the vernacular a bit overdone.

"I wanted to get some feedback from the congregation," he said," because it's my understanding we will be presented with a contract from Warner for use of the church for filming.

"I've talked with some of the people, and then Sunday we talked about it some more. The feedback I got was that it would be interesting and fun to have the building used. It would be an opportunity to have an inside look at how a film is made. It's not everyday you get that chance."

Rev. Atkinson said he read some passages from the book to his congregation last Sunday. "The use of the words in the book, and his insight - he touches on feelings and emotions so eloquently. He's won a Pulitzer Prize and is

Liquor license decision

The state Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission recently upheld a decision by selectmen not to grant J. Bildner's and Sons a wine and beer license.

Saying the town has enough such establishments, selectmen voted in February to deny the license proposal made by Windward Management, owners of Bildner's.

The gourmet grocery store located in the Cushing Plaza requested the license to sell fine wines and beers at their Rte. 3A location. Selectmen said there was no need for more establishments in town.

After scheduling a hearing May 1, the ABCC ruled the previous decision by selectmen was correct. "The Cohasset Board acted reasonably and within its discretion," the commission noted in a letter to selectmen.

Mooring list reminder

Harbormaster Harry Ritter has warned all boaters on the waiting list for harbor moorings to reaffirm their position by June 1. If boaters fail to reaffirm their position, there is a risk they will lose that position, Ritter stated.

Inspector reappointed

Former Building Inspector Edward Poskus reappointed Robert A. Leonard Sr. plumbing inspector and inspector of gas and gas applicance for the town.

The reappointment of Leonard will extend for one year, beginning May 7.

Committee reorganization

Following the resignation of Sharon Becker from the committee, Priscilla Tebbetts was elected chairman of the Disposal Area Study Committee.

Becker resigned from the study committee following her election to the board of health. Eleanor Smith was elected secretary of the disposal area study committee.

Members Arthur Pompeo Jr. and Donald L. DeMichele requested reappointment to the committee.

No occupancy permit

Until the retention basin at the Country Associates Condominiums on Beechwood Street is made to conform with the town's specifications, the building inspector will not issue an occupancy permit.

In a letter to the condominium owners May 7, the drainage advisory committee outlined its concern that the retention basin on the property was not constructed according to plans previously approved by the committee.

Drainage committee chairman Thomas Cook noted the basin as constructed, does not allow the pond to act as a retention basin and limits water levels to below the Beechwood Street levels.

In response to the committee's order to rebuild the basin, Building Inspector Poskus said he will not issue an occupancy permit for the former Harmony Hill structure. As soon as the matter is resolved with the drainage committee, Poskus said an occupancy permit will be issued.

Does anyone out there know who these people are? For the answers to the Peek at the Past photo from two weeks ago, please see pg. 21.

Railroad meeting

There will be a meeting May 27 at 8 p.m. with M.B.T.A. officials to discuss the restoration of the Old Colony Greenbush commuter railroad.

The public is invited to the meeting which will be held at the Barnes Auditorium in the town office building.

Committee vacancies

Because of the resignations of several town board members, selectmen are seeking residents interested in serving on varous boards and commissions.

Anyone interested in serving on the following committees should submit their resume to the selectmen's office.

Personnel committee member Frank Evans recently resigned, leaving a vacancy on that board; Robert Maki resigned from that board, leaving the committee without one member; Chairman Sharon Becker resigned from the Disposal Area Study Committee, opening a vacancy on that group.

Mary Ann Barbuto, who submitted her resignation as Assistant Town Accountant, also resigned from the employees insurance advisory committee. There is now a vacancy on that study committee.

In addition to Barbuto's resignation, selectmen this week accepted the resignation of assistant administrative secretary Florence Kelly. The position in the selectmen's office has been advertised.

Reservation land issues

After recently touring the littered Whitney and Thayer Woods Reservation, the operator of Cohasset Heights landfill agreed to remove the debris.

Three weeks ago, selectman James Gallagher complained about the unslightly litter found along the reservation property.

April 3, the chairman of the southeast region of The Trustees of Reservations toured the land with Paul Barry of Cohasset Heights, health board chairman Barbara Kern, and Sharon Becker, who at that time was running for election to the health board.

During the tour, Barry requested permission from the trustees to blast and remove ledge and boulders from a portion of the reservation land. According to Cohasset Heights' engineers who participated in the tour, the ledge removal would improve the flow of surface water runoff originating at the landfill. It would also cause that runoff to flow more toward the Great Swamp and away from Lily Pond, the town's water supply source.

Trustee supervisor Thomas Foster expressed his concern about the proposed project, and requested a geologist survey the site. At the time, Barry agreed the landfill owners would pay for the geological survey.

Foster also requested the health board and conservation commission be notified of the proposal.

Another portion of the discussion April 3 concerned the previous installation of a catch basin at the base of Scituate Hill by Cohasset Heights owners. Barry told the trustee supervisor the basin would be removed.

Selectmen order dogs permanently restrained

Monday night, selectman ordered two dogs belonging to Debbie Legos of Mendel Road, to be permanently restrained inside her home.

Selectman Mary Jane McArthur warned the owners if the dogs become loose and bother neighbor Paul Mattes, the animals will be ordered destroyed or removed from town.

Dog officer Richard Yokum testified Monday night he had received complaints from Mattes. Based on those complaints he ordered the doberman restrained on the property. However, on April 28, the dog became loose again,and attacked a 16-year old girl who was visiting the Mattes' home.

Although there are two dogs belonging to Legos, the black labrador is not as much of a nuisance to the neighbors, Officer Yokum testified. However, he requested both animals be restrained on the property.

According to Mattes, the two dogs have barked continuously for six to seven months. "I have heard nothing but dogs barking," he toldselectmen,"even when they are restrained and in the house and at night. It's got to the point I'm going out of my mind. I'm thinking about selling my house - I hate it - I can't stand it."

The dogs' owner told selectmen the animals have been restrained since ordered by the dog officer. But sometimes the dogs' lead has been clipped, she said, proving that someone is deliberately removing the doberman from this restraint. "And there are six dogs on that street," she said, "Mine are not the only dogs that bark."

Selectman Mary Jane MacArthur reminded her there is a town bylaw which states no dog will disturb the peace of a neighbor. "This dog is not going to disturb the neighbors," she warned. "You have to keep him inside the house. And the very first time they are outside, Mr. Mattes will report it to the dog officer."

Mattes told selectmen he does not want to see the dogs destroyed, but he wanted to have both dogs controlled.

In other business Monday night, selectmen approved 37 articles for the June 23 special town meeting warrant.

Included in the warrant will be three articles sponsored by the sewer commission. One article requests $20,000 in anticipated legal fees for the commission's special counsel. Although chairman Charles DeSantis said he does not expect to expend all the funds, legal services would be needed to remove the agreement of judgment held against Cohasset since 1980 by the attorney general for the violation of the town's discharge permit. "It's important to remove any potential liability from the state," he said.

Selectman McArthur said the town has three options, to build a central sewer plant, remodel the present plant or connect with the Hull treatment plant. "Then why do you need Goodwin, Proctor and Hoar (special sewer commission legal counsel)?" she said.

DeSantis explained everything is insignificant to removing that last liability with the state. Regarding the negotiation with the state for a modified Ward plan agreement, he noted, "We are now in control of our own destiny. Although 98 percent of the negotiations are completed, we still have to remove the town from the legal threats of the state and any potential liability from the state."

"What have we accomplished?" Selectman Rocco Laugelle questioned. "I don't believe we're going to see the Ward plan survive."

DeSantis said the town has expended $20-$30,000 in fees to special town counsel, which includes a vast amount of engineering work.

"What have we accomplished?" Selectman Rocco Laugelle questioned. "I don't believe we're going to see the Ward plan survive."

The commission chairman noted the sewer commissions of Hull and Cohasset are working toward the completion of an intramunicipal agreement which will be 98 percent financed by state and federal government. Three drafts of the agreement have been reviewed by the two commissions, he said. DeSantis expected the agreement will be finalized in time for approval at the special town meeting in the fall.

Although there will be an article requesting approval of the modified Ward Plan at the June 23 meeting, DeSantis said he expects the finalized version and intramunicipal agreement will not be prepared by that time. That article will request $450,000 for the modified plan negotiated and approved by the state and the town. If the agreement between Cohasset and Hull is not completed in time, DeSantis said the article will be withdrawn at the June 23 meeting.

There is also an article to pay $10,000 for legal and engineering fees incurred during the negotiations of the modified sewer plan. For that amount, DeSantis said the town has received an extensive streets analysis and a detailed sewer service map which can be used by the town in the future. "We need this money more for reserve," he told selectman. "I can't see many more demands by the state on our money. But it behooves us to have this in reserve." The levels of detail required of the Cohasset sewer service far exceeds any work our engineers have done before."

Sewer Commissioner Gary Vanderweil agreed, "the state's been giving us a hard time." When asked if that was the result of giving up a central sewer plant in favor of an alternative plan, DeSantis answered, "Yes, that's seems to have something to do with it."

"WHIPLASH" AND INSTABILITY

The "whiplash" motion of a car accident can result in a neck problem known as instability. Often associated with this problem are neck pain, muscle spasms and the sensation of a wobbly neck. These symptoms may be due to stretched or torn ligaments, muscles or tendons. Left untreated, instability can result in stiff scar tissue around the joints in the neck. Referred pain, headache and disc problems are additional complaints. The goals of chiropractic adjustments concerning neck instability are to relieve pain and spasm, to restore the alignment of the neck and to increase its strength and stability. Because ligaments stabilize the neck, they usually are the focus of soft tissue adjustments.

Any sudden motion, whether from accident or athletic involvement, can produce such discomfort. The science of chiropractic can serve to alleviate the resultant discomfort and return one to a state of total well-being. For attention to such problems as you may experience, we welcome your call at the COHASSET CHIROPRACTIC OFFICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Suite 12. Pain and suffering need not be a constant companion. Modified Ward plan presented during hearing

Mariner Staff

The sewer commission Thursday May 15, presented a revised sewering plan to room full of concerned citizens.

The revised plan projects expansion of the sewer service area in three phases over ten years, but will neither include Route 3A nor the Ledgewood area.

The plan also calls for the conversion of Cohasset's waste water treatment plant to a pumping station which will pump the town's waste water through a force main to a waste water treatment plant in Hull.

"We're looking to get out of the sewer business," said Charles DeSantis, chairman of the sewer commission. "The cost of running a treatment plant is expensive; these things are animals.

If approved by town meetings in both Cohasset and Hull, Cohasset sewer construction would begin the following year, after one year of planning.

The first phase would connect: the Veterans' area; Baily Road; Ridgetop Road; Pond Street from the high school to Baily Road; 100 Pond Street; Cushing Road; Smith Place; Ripley Road to Pratt Court; Pleasant Street; Deer Hill School; James Lane; Howard Gleason Road; Hull Street from 61 to the Hull town line and Jerusalem Road from Hull Street to the Greek Church.

Phase two, which would begin five years after the implementation of the first phase, would cover the rest of The Hillside including: Spring Street; Buttonwood Lane; Atlantic Avenue to 31 and Summer Street to Blackhorse Lane.

"We're looking to get out of the sewer business," said Charles DeSantis, chairman of the sewer commission.

After another five years, the final portion of properties would be connected. These included: Old Pasture Road; Reservoir Road; Holly Lane; Woodland Drive; Virginia Lane; Lantern Lane; Bancroft Road; adjacent homes on Pond Street; Border Street to 119 and the Town Wharf and Parker Avenue, including Cohasset Colonials.

DeSantis explained, a third part of the program will involve an ongoing program to repair failing on-site septic systems in the unsewered areas. The sewer commission has targeted 103 problem systems to repair.

DeSantis compared the new Ward Plan to the old M & E Plan.

The new plan, according to the chairman, will cost less than half of M & E's proposed phase one. The old plan was expected to cost about $4.8 million, while the entire Ward Plan was estimated at $2,364,000. He explained, the commission plans to implement sewer construction in three phases to avoid overriding Proposition 2 1/2. The debt limit under Propostion 2 1/2 restricts further borrowing to $2 million, he added, and other projects, such as refurbishments to Town Hall and the police and fire stations have to be taken into consideration.

DeSantis estimated the average tax burden during design year to be "$51 for a typical home (valued at $125,000) throughtout town." During the construction year, he estimated a $44 cost to the "typical home" owner.

The newly-sewered taxpayer would pay a one-time connection cost of $1,085, he explained, and a further cost of $485 for operation and maintenance during the first year of operation. Presently sewered taxpayers would chip in $245, while the average unsewered taxpayer would be charged $128.

DeSantis explained, the new Ward Plan will achieve elimination of Cohasset's discharge permit violation and an end to the legal confrontation between the state and Cohasset.

Paul Taurasi and Al Slater, representatives of the state's Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) expressed their agency's support of the new plan. "In general," Taurasi said, "we can support most of the recommendations of this report because it includes the fact that this (Hull) is a regional plant and we have had many successful regional plants throughout the state."

Taurasi said he was concerned about the state of negotiations with Hull.

DeSantis explained, "Negotiations hinge on a number of ongoing studies with Hull, which should be finished in August. I would like to point out, three draft agreements have been back and forth and we believe 98 percent of the language is complete."

R. Murray Campbell of Old Pasture Road assailed the plan. "The M & E plan would have sewered one-third of the town, but this new plan will sewer only one-tenth of the town for just $1.6 million less.

"It never does sewer Route 3A or the Ledgewood area," he added, "and we still wouldn't have our own plant; we'd be tied to Hull with all it's disadvantages."

DeSantis explained, "We find it makes much more sense for two small communities to share one plant."

He added, "We have addressed the problems on Route 3A and we've analyzed it with our engineers and we feel that any problems on 3A should be dealt with by an on-site program. The cost to extend sewer service out to that area is prohibitive."

"The M & E plan would have sewered one-third of the town, but this new plan will sewer only one-tenth of the town for just $1.6 million less," said R.M. Campbell.

Chuck Dauchy, the project's planner added, "We focused on the areas of highest density. There will be 435 connections, 452 with the abutting vacant lots connected. We have accounted for all potential growth."

He told Campbell, "The M & E plan would serve 555 equivalent dwelling units, while the Ward Plan will serve 519. The difference is that M & E provides for extensive growth capacity along Route 3A and the Ward Plan does not."

De Santis explained the reason for the commission's cost consciousness. "Under the original Ward Plan, we had a 94 percent funding program. We were not constrained by financing and we could have done the whole thing in one shot. We could have bought the Cadillac with the town paying only six percent and not cared.

"Now," he added, "the Town of Cohasset is paying 50 percent and we have to go with phased construction." He pointed to the plan and added, "Our engineers say this is our best approach. With the town paying half the bill, we have to go for the most cost-effective system.

REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES

By Norma Telesco
Home Center Realty

WHO DOES THE REALTOR REPRESENT?

In most residential real estate trar. actions, the Realtor represents the seller. Does this mean that you should not work with an agent when you look for your next home? Not at all!

Realtors help people sell their homes and help other people find new homes. In this matchmaking process, Realtors have a fiduciary obligation to their sellers, but are also obligated by their code of ethics to treat buyers fairly. They must give you accurate information about the properties they show you, and they're held accountable to buyers by their own Board of Realtors as well as State licensing agencies and the courts.

Perhaps the strongest accountability is in the marketplace. In this business, reputation is crucial, and referrals from past customers are essential for a Realtor to remain in the business! This provides the strongest incentive for Realtors to get you and your family moved into a home that you love at a price you can afford and under conditions that will make you and the seller feel terrific about the transaction.

If there's a move in your future, call the professionals at Home Center Realty. Our number is 749-8833, or just drop by our offices at 57 Water St., Hingham. We're happy to serve all your real estate needs.

Coalition gets $25,000 grant for acquifer study

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

The 10 towns of the South Shore Coalition have received a $25,000 state grant to begin a study of aquifers in an effort to protect water supplies, state Sen. William B. Golden (D-Weymouth) announced last week.

The grant, administered by the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering, will be used to begin a regional groundwater protection study in July.

It will also be used to help member communities to inventory possible hazardous-waste locations and sources because, in some towns, local officials "simply don't know what they have in their towns," he told coalition representatives Thursday.

"As the maps show, aquifers do not respect neatly-drawn geographical boundaries. What one town does — or does not do — has an effect on other communities in the region."

Regional regulations would solve problems local officials face when portions of well-recharge areas lie outside their town's limits, preventing officials from a say in how the land is developed.

Golden said Weymouth faces such a problem, since 25 percent of the 1,700-acre Great Pond recharge area lies in Holbrook and Braintree, where a 375-home subdivision is currently being planned.

If studies result in new aquifer-protection regulations common to coalition towns, "the plan will be the first of its kind in the commonwealth," Golden said.

Environmental consultants say groundwater in the county's major aquifer, which stretches from Plymouth through Duxbury, Pembroke, Hanover, Norwell and Weymouth, moves from south to north. Therefore, what Plymouth or Duxbury do to protect groundwater may eventually affect water quality in towns such as Hingham and Weymouth, Golden said.

The study will take several years and the coalition must apply for grant renewals each fiscal year. Golden expressed confidence that the grant will be renewed as the study progresses.

He called the grant "another expression of the state's confidence in the work of the South Shore Coalition.

"I see no reason why they wouldn't want us to continue that work" in fiscal 1988 and beyond, he said.

Golden recognized the efforts of officials in Hingham, Cohasset and Hanover to establish water-protection bylaws. Duxbury has just completed an aquifer study with the intention of creating a "green space," to include the town forest and land owned by the Audubon Society, for water protection.

Golden stressed that the upcoming study has nothing to do with water supplies.

"It has nothing to do with drinking water or distribution issues," he said. "It is being done solely to protect groundwater," the source for more than half of the state's water supply.

The Scoop on Souppes. . .

In response to many inquiries regarding the nature of Souppes-sur-Loing, Cohasset's sister city in France, the Cultural Exchange Committee has put together the following information.

Souppes is a small town of 4,350 residents located 90 kilometers south of Paris (a two hour dirve). Five small schools, a train station, and a town-owned hotel grace the perimeter of the village center. Although not a coastal community, Souppes has strong ties to the water; the Loing River flows alongside the town and the area is dotted with innumerable natural ponds and lakes. Fishing, swimming, sailing, kayaking, and windsurfing are listed as residents' major summer activities. The town also owns a large recreational area complete with gymnasium, clay tennis courts, eating facilities, and seminar rooms.

Souppes is governed by Mayor Prudhomme who has been in office since 1959. Born in 1916, Victor Prudhomme was a veterinarian before he became interested in politics. His wife Violette works in the Social Service Department of the French government as an aide to immigrants.

While in Cohasset, the Prudhommes will stay with Jack and Esty Manning and their two sons, John and Benjamin, for the first four days, and for the last four days they will stay with Jeff and Don Steele of South Main Street.

Mr. and Mrs. Renee Dine and Mrs. and Mrs. Jacques Verbeeck will accompany the Prudhommes on their first visit to the United States. Mr. Dine is chairman of the Cultural Exchange Committee in Officials from our sister city of Souppes-sur-Loing include (left) Mr. Renee Dine and Mayor Prudhomme (right).

Souppes. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Pearce of South Main Street will host the Dines during their stay in Cohasset.

The Verbeecks' relationship with Cohasset goes back many years. During World War II, Cohasset resident Tom Churchill was Commander of the American Task Force that liberated Souppes from German occupation, and Christine Verbeeck was assigned to him as interpreter. Since then the two families have grown to be very close friends. The Verbeecks will, of course, be staying with Tom and Celeste Churchill of Bound Brook Lane,

The Cohasset Exchange Committee encourages anyone who is planning a trip to France this year to take a few days to get to know Souppes. International travellers should contact the committee for names and addresses of families who have opened their homes to Cohasset residents.

Classes for older children will meet evenings.

Classes are kept small to provide individual instruction. Informational flyers may be picked up at the three Hingham public elementary schools.

Area code fight is over—617 to stay

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

South Shore residents from Quincy to Kingston will remain in telephone area code 617 after New England Telephone Co. implements a new eastern Massachusetts area code — 508 — beginning in late 1988.

Company executives announced Monday that a new, smaller 617 area code will remain around greater Boston and will include all South Shore towns except Plymouth, Bridgewater and Brockton (see map).

The new code boundary — which is final, company officials said — is in sharp contrast to earlier proposals, which either left the South Shore out of 617 entirely or split its towns between the two new codes.

Area code 508 will take in communities from the New Hampshire border to Cape Cod, Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard — in short, areas included in the current 617 code that are outside greater Boston.

The boundary for the new 617 code forms a ring around Greater Boston. Its westernmost towns will be Wellesley and Weston, while its northernmost communities wil be Lynnfield and Reading.

South Shore lawmakers and business leaders were very pleased with the announcement.

"I'm absolutely elated," said state Sen. William B. Golden (D-Weymouth).

"It's one more indicator that the South Shore is beginning to become a cohesive region, that others are treating us as such now and that we're no longer going to be treated like the poor stepchild of the Boston region."

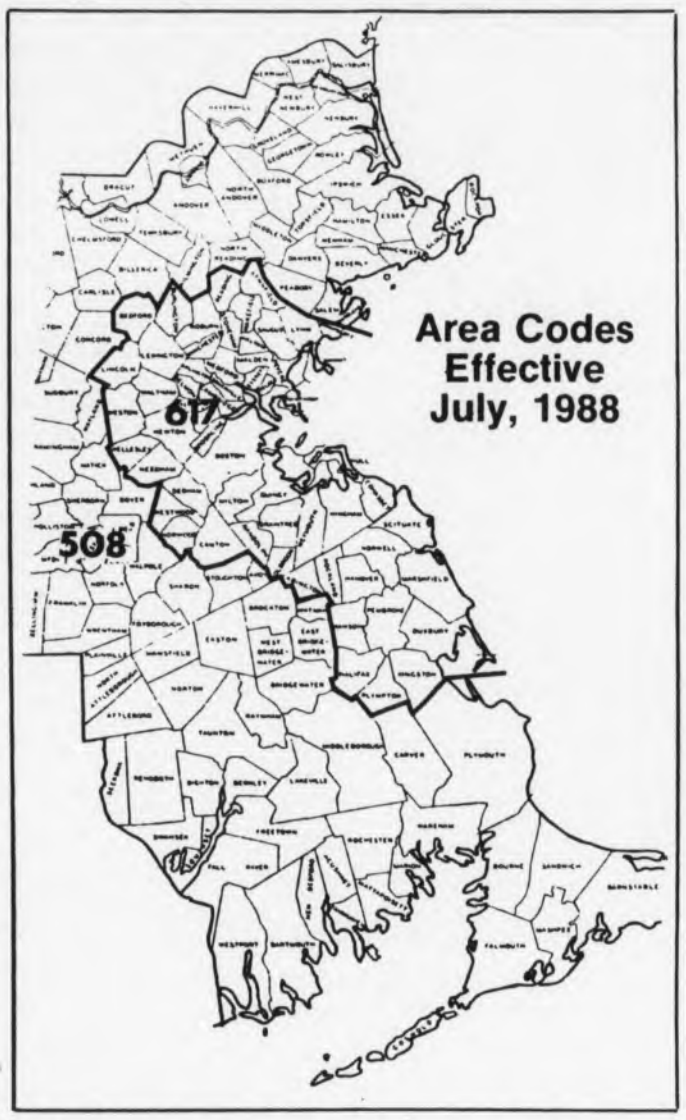
Golden and Sen. Paul Harold (D-Quincy) and state Reps. William Flynn (D-Hanover) and Frank M. Hynes (D-Marshfield, Scituate) combined forces this winter with the South Shore Chamber of Commerce and the South Shore Coalition to express the region's opposition to being split between the new codes or left out of 617.

At a South Shore Coalition meeting in February, Golden threatened action "in the legislature and the courts" to stop those proposals.

Golden credited the legislators, organizations and the telephone company with the boundary decision.

"It's been a real effort by a lot of different people and groups," he said. "You also have to give a lot of credit to New England Telephone because the company was flexible enough to respond to our concerns."

"The bottom line proves" the phone company's concern for the South Shore and its needs, said Kevin J. Costello, community-development manager of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce.



In arguing for leaving the South Shore within 617, Costello said the chamber used results from a recent survey of 450 businesses which showed that an overwhelming majority wanted to remain within the code assigned to metropolitan Boston.

Golden said he argued that other regions like the North Shore and western suburbs had been left within 617 in earlier proposals at the expense of the South Shore.

"If you compare population and the number of communities of the North and South shores, I think you'll find that roughly the same numbers have been included in (the new) 617," he said. "That wasn't the case before, and that was at the center of our concerns."

No general rate change planned

New England Telephone cited a lack of remaining telephone exchanges — the first three digits in a seven-digit phone number — when it announced in August that eastern Massachusetts would need a new area code by 1989.

In a news conference held Monday in downtown Boston, John Coleman, vice president for Massachusetts, said strong economic growth coupled with incresing demand for new telephone services have reduced the number of available exchanges to 75. Such new services include cellular telephones and lines dedicated to computer-information transfers.

There are 640 exchanges possible in an area code. Coleman said the 508 code will allow the phone company to double the number of available phone lines in eastern Massachusetts.

Both 508 and 617 currently contain about 1.25 million customers each. Both are expected to last 20 to 25 years, when an additional code is expected to become necessary, Coleman explained.

While some residents along boundary towns may find phone bills rising or falling by less than $1 a month, Coleman emphasized the company has no plans to use the new codes as a vehicle for general rate hikes.

"I can't say what might happen in 15 years, but I can say the company has absolutely no plans to raise rates right now," he said.

'It will remain a local call'

The area-code change will also have no effect on rates or services offered under Bay State East or Circle dialing, Coleman added.

"If it's a local call now, it will remain a local call. The only difference will be that, after early 1989, you'll have to dial 11 digits to make the same call."

State Sen. William Golden will be hosting his annual Sunday Brunch Sunday, June 1, from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. at the Ridder Country Club in Whitman.

around town

☐Twelve members of the Federal Aviation Administration's New England Region, including William J. White of Cohasset, were cited for individual achievements during 1985 at ceremonies in the agency's Burlington regional headquarters.

White, Aviation Safety Inspector with the Flight Standards Division, was commended for "his outstanding performance during the accomplishment of in-depth inspections of Continental Airlines, Eastern Airlines and the Anchorage, Alaska, district office." He distinguished himself by unselfishly devoting his personal time and energy to the agency in times of difficult and important missions.

☐Our fair town could almost be nicknamed "Athletic Village" lately, so many have made the local sports news! Two former Cohasset High stars had grand years at their colleges. John Drago, a sophomore at the University of Hartford, earned a letter for his reserve role on the "Hawks" golf team. Carla Lucas, a freshman at Wheaton and a member of the softball team, is batting .233 through 13 games with nine RBIs. Carla was also a standout for Wheaton in the basketball season.

☐Although she may be older than the two mentioned above, Ann Leonard is still headline material! It is said that she has more medals than any Olympic star in the track and field events! She has entered the Senior Olympics in Quincy for the last three years, and has won many medals. Last year she even received the trophy for being the best all-around female athlete. She does more than many teens do to keep fit, including walking five miles twice a week (that's her long walk, but she does walk every day for shorter distances on the other days), she leads the Walking Club at the Senior Center, she exercises three nights a week with a mixed age group that even includes teens, and she competes in the javelin throw, shot put, long jumps, horseshoe throwing and the half mile and three mile walks for the Senior Olympics. She recently took part in the 20 mile walk for hunger. Whew, it makes me tired just writing about it! Hopefully, we will get the results of her efforts on Saturday's Olympic events, but one thing is for sure — she is a winner, no matter what place she comes in! And, her cheering section of daughters — Ann, Patty and Susan, along with their four children, will vouch for that!

☐Any of our Cohasset men going to apply for the 1986 pageant that will crown a Mr. Male America? They are looking for a man who possesses poise, personality, charm and handsomeness, and the one who best typifies these attributes will be the spokesman for "modern man in America." If any of you men are interested, you must be over 18, a state resident for over six months, and a citizen of the U.S. Send a snapshot and brief biography with a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Mr. Massachusetts — Male America Pageant Headquarters, 18 Warren Street, Georgetown, MA 01833 (c/o Dida Hagan, State Director) or call with questions at (617) 352-7200. Surely everyone knows that their favorite male could be a contender, so talk him into it. Wouldn't it be grand to watch the event in November and see a Cohasset male on the stage!

☐Congratulations to Jeannine Pompeo, who graduated from Assumption College this past weekend. We wish her and all of her fellow graduates good luck and much success in the "Real World."

☐Remember to license your dog by the end of the month, or it will be "fair catch" for the dog officer. And, $$ for you.

☐The Cohasset Boosters Club held their final Awards Night of the year, and the banana boats were enjoyed by all, as well as the awards. Good work by the Boosters — It's nice to support our athletes the way that you do. If you haven't already done so, be sure to stop by the gym and see the banners that are hanging, most of which were purchased by this same Club. It's a real tribute to our teams, and makes one feel almost as good as being in the Boston Garden!

☐Geoffrey W. Martin of Cohasset graduted May 18 from Xaverian Brothers High School in Westwood.

☐The Deer Hill Science Fair was a success. The students worked very hard to make it so. Good work to all of the sixth graders that helped to make it such a good event.

☐As this is being written, many of Cohasset's finest are graduating from Boston College. Much success to them — A list of their nameswill be printed as soon as possible. One that comes to mind is Jack McNeill, whose family now resides in Hudson, NH. Continued good work, Jack. Stop and see us along the way.

☐That's it from here for the week. Keep your news coming, we love it.

Committee approves summer reading list for CHS

He added, "If we don't assign any reading, it won't get done. We would like the reading to be enjoyable."

Kite added, a verification form completed by parents, along with the reports, would help assure the department that a student "couldn't somehow circumvent the reading process."

Also, it would be a great way to get parents involved in their child's summer reading program, he said.

"We're trying to stimulate good reading," he explained. "We're not trying to strait-jacket anyone's summer vacation."

Kite said reading lists are being updated. He suggested the lists be sent through the mail, rather than sent home with students.

"I've noticed," he said, "important things don't seem to get home. Last year, the number of lists I saw in the wastebaskets at the end of the year, was depressing. We wanted to put some teeth into this program."

Committee member Dick Conley asked why the limit was set at two books. "I've heard about a plan whereby a student is awarded a prize for every five books read. It might be worth looking into what other schools are up to."

Kite agreed, however, he said he wants "to keep it as simple as possible" for now.

In other business, the committee announced three finalists for the principal's position being vacated by Richard Streeter, who will be assistant superintendent next year.

Mary Ellen Gallagher, assistant principal of Hingham High School and Hingham resident Robert Jarvis, principal of Methuen High School, will compete for the post with Tom Davis, a high school principal from Houston, Texas.

The committee is expected to vote on Superintendent Eugene Crowell's recommendation Wednesday night.

PSO study shows need for afterschool program

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Claudia Story, the new president of Cohasset's Parent School Organization (PSO) Monday presented to the school committee a survey that shows favorable community support for an after-school day care program.

Similar to a recent Hingham day care proposal, the PSO survey results call for a program serving elementary school aged children, primarily of working parents.

The children would be bused after school to a central site, where they would participate in various activities, including sports, arts and crafts until their parents could pick them up.

The PSO performed a survey to ascertain whether there is a need in Cohasset for such a program. Of the 790 questionnaires sent out, 92 were answered, a 12 percent response.

Of those who answered the survey, 56 indicated they would be interested in enrolling their children in such a program next year. Another seven answered "probably", while 25 said "no" and four didn't respond.

Like the Hingham plan, the $5-$10 per day price of the program, along with the estimated response, indicates the program would be financially self-sufficient.

Because of insurance considerations, the program would be run by the school, not the PSO. A director and staff would need to be hired and would be part-time school employees.

In other related business, the school committee and the Cohasset Housing Authority could not come to an agreement Monday on the proposed transfer of land near Deer Hill School.

The housing authority, which is seeking space to build low-income housing units, along with a group proposing an intermediate care facility for 16 handicapped individuals, was unable to come to acreage terms with the School Committee.

Under the government program, the handicapped care facility would be owned by the housing authority, but be subsidized by the state. And it must be built on state-owned land.

Specifically, the groups are looking to transfer 24.6 acres and put a dead end street off Evergreen Lane. Of those 24.6 acres, a 1.99 acre plot would be owned by the state and would hold the intermediate care facility. The whole parcel is bordered by Deer Hill School, Route 3A and Old Pasture Road.

The housing authority plan would have left five acres between the development and the school building, but the School Committee said "No."

The housing authority told the committee they chose the parcel because "it's the best buildable land. It's sewerable; it's near the fire department as well as nature trails."

"Are we going to give away all that school land?" Kornet asked incredulously.

The two agencies haggled over compromise measures, with the school committee suggesting and hinting that the housing authority should consider other locations, but the housing authority wouldn't bite.

At the end of the meeting, the School Committee told the housing authority it will confer with the School Facilities Committee and try for a consensus.

Selectmen review June 23 article

-about $13,000 to implement the step raise increases recommended by the personnel consultants for the positions of town clerk, the treasurer/collector and highway surveyor.

-agreement of a police contract, if it is finalized.

-acceptance of the consultant's bid to construct an addition onto the town hall.

The commissioners said the only legal fees remaining unpaid for the past year are those incurred in preparation of last week's public hearing. DeSantis estimated that would be an additional $2-$3,000 in expenditures for this fiscal year.

A third article sponsored by the sewer commission requests $725 in unpaid legal fees from May 1, 1985 to June 30, 1985. That amount was deducted from a total of $15,372 in legal fees to the special town counsel which selectmen approved for payment Monday night.

Other articles to be included in the special town meeting warrant are: a citizens' petition requesting the town revert back to the original Metcalf and Eddy sewer plan or study a combination of the Ward and Metcalf and Eddy plans; acceptance of personnel reclassification plan, as proposed by the consultant firm hired by selectmen. According to Executive Secretary Don Andrew, the proposed reclassification system will strike out the entire present bylaw and propose an entirely new one.

Owe it to native son

There's been a lot of complaining in town, some verbal and some a bit more private. It seems a native son of this town, who returned home with his wife, has been rebuked.

Most folks don't understand the ins and outs of state health codes and Cohasset's supplemental codes. For whatever the reason, the health board denied Walter Sweeney and his wife Nancy the right to rebuild the family home destroyed in a 1969 fire. The board cited three reasons why the variances were not approved — all centering around state and local health codes.

The Sweeney's first obstacle was gaining permission to rebuild a septic system more than three years after it was abandoned. That was approved last year by the board.

Now, after spending thousands of dollars on engineers and legal help, the Sweeneys had a $30,000 septic system designed for a one-bathroom, two-bedroom home. By denying three of the ten variances requested for the non conforming lot, the health board in effect rejected the entire plan. It can not be built, they stated in their determination.

Now the appeal will rest in the hands of a court judge. More money for the Sweeneys and more aggravation and legal costs for the town.

It's difficult not to get sentimental about this case. Walt Sweeney is a hero to his generation and to their kids growing up in this community. To deny him the right to come back home seems a most cruel blow.

Perhaps the board did follow the letter of the law in denying this septic system, and the Sweeney's right to rebuild their homestead.

But as we see it, our elected officials sit on boards and commissions to serve the town and its residents.

They certainly must not rule contrary to state and local law. But the health board, as with the other town boards, must always see through the maze of rules and regulations to the human side of an application. If the septic system proposed by the Sweeneys is inadequate, how can one be devised which will service the home and abide by the law? Help the people of this town, do not provide more obstacles.

To the public this decision against the Sweeneys seems implausible. How can a man, whose family lived on that same property (only with more bathrooms and a lot more people crowded inside) be denied the right to rebuild a structure that's been there for generations.

It's a non-conforming lot. The point is, many systems in ledgey, marshy Cohasset are non-conforming. So if your house burns down and it takes you more than three years to rebuild, for whatever the reason, our guess is that you too will be denied the right to rebuild. Insurance is not the problem — it's your irregular septic system.

We side with those who call for a re-hearing on this matter. Let the health board work with the applicant. Let's have this professionally-designed system put back on a piece of property that has never complied with state code — but never failed during its generations of use.

That's what the town owes a native son returned home.

Sewer meeting rhetoric continues

To the Editor:

Those who stayed away in droves from the Sewer Commission's presentation in Town Hall, May 15, missed out on the rousing rhetoric about the objective of the sewer plan. The objective seems to be preservation of Cohasset's rural charm and delicate ecology by using an inadequate sewer system to discourage growth. It was not explained why the equally beautiful and unspoiled town of Carmel on the Pacific coast of California has met these objectives far better than Cohasset and has had a complete sewer system for many years.

It was not explained why a good long-term solution to our pollution problem is inconsistent with good planning and effective use of zoning and ordinances to preserve the character of the town. Seems to me that graceful aging should include continuing to smell good. In the case of Cohasset, to smell better than it does now.

Attendees learned that the approval and funding agency, DEQE, "has reservations" about the scope and details of this curious plan. And well they might, and too bad more Cohasset residents don't get off their butts to examine and protest its inadequacies. Attendees learned that, instead of being connected directly to sewers through 4" or 6" pipes which are difficult to clog, they will retain their existing tanks and leaching fields, and be connected to the sewer system through 2" pipes. Of course, the tanks will have to be pumped every two years or so to prevent the stuff the bugs can't digest from building up and overflowing into the 2" pipe to clog it.

We learned also that it is by no means certain that Hull town meeting will appropriate the interconnection.

We can thank the DEQE representatives who were present for correcting Mr. DeSantis' brave attempt to discount the latest warning from DEQE, dated May 9. It says not only are state funds unavailable for on-site repairs, but that use of the funding for such purpose is considered illegal. Thus disappears one of the big selling points of the Ward Plan—that "it covers the entire town." It always was nonsense anyway. Whatever is done, or is not done, to assist owners in repairing on-site systems, and however funded, is equally applicable to any sewage treatment plan. Except that the Ward Plan provides sewers to fewer homes, thus leaving more residences in need of on-site repair.

Despite repeated questions, the sewer commission could not explain the anamoly between Mr. Guild's assertion in the Mariner two weeks ago (and stubbornly confirmed at the meeting May 15) that nearly one-third of the town would have been sewered by the M&E plan at a cost to Cohasset of $4.4 million, and the admission in the May 15 presentation that it would now cost the town $2.4 million to sewer the three phases of the Ward Plan (which total less homes than even phase I of the M&E plan), while claiming that the cost per newly sewered residence is lower with the Ward Plan. The answer, such as it was, boiled down to "we aren't in the business of building treatment plants." Maybe, but it certainly is the business of the sewer commission to provide (not just claim to provide) the most cost effective long-term solution to our pollution problems.

Actually, the correct answer is that Mr. Gould's statement is in error, as well as being inconsistent

DeSantis requests a health board hearing

(This letter was sent to the Board of Health.)

I am very concerned about the implications that the Board of Health's denial of reconstruction will have upon the majority of homeowners within this community. The spectre of losing one's homestead due to fire is frightening enough, but now with the added ominous threat of the Town denying the homeowner the right to rebuild his fire-destroyed home, it is imperative that this case be further discussed.

Therefore, I am requesting that your board reschedule at your earliest convenience a rehearing for the 21 Bow Street property. A rehearing is vital so that the Sweeney's might find justice, that my concerns be relieved, and that the serious negative impact the Sweeney reconstruction denial has upon the residents of this town be removed.

If I can be of any additional help in your discussions, let me know.

Sincerely,
Charles DeSantis, Chairman
For the Cohasset Sewer Commission with a number in the May 15 handout.

I'm often underwhelmed by people who consider themselves expert in whatever they happen to be talking about, but listened anyway to Bill Baird's pontification about his careful comparison of the M&E plan with some version of the Ward Plan, and his conclusion that the M&E plan was self serving. Well, I've a few years more experience in contributing to, supervising or reviewing a variety of complex engineering studies, and I pontificate that the M&E plan was well considered and a golden opportunity missed, whereas the Ward Plan would be unlikely to survive unemotional and non-ideological scrutiny by a hard-eyed industrial or commercial client. Such was the quality of advice from the Sewer Advisory Committee, which must share the blame for the mess the town has made of this matter. Unfortunately, in municipal adventures, oratorical exploitation of prejudices and a tendency to be cheap at any cost determines the vote, rather than rational analysis.

It seems to me that the failure of the three-phase Ward Plan to cover the sewered area voted at the June 1984 meeting (which is the same as the minimum Phase I M&E area) and which omits the 3A/Beechwood/Brewster-Ledgewood area, will inevitably result in having to construct our own treatment plant later, because we will not be able to increase the flow to Hull. As health concerns increase, and as the regulations governing on-site systems are tightened, we will be forced to a central treatment system. If Cohasset is lucky, Hull will vote down the interconnection, and we will be forced to adopt the wise long-term solution of building our own adequate plant now, rather than have a Hull connection plus our own after-thought plant.

The sewer commission chairman implied that the alternative to the Hull connection is refurbishing our existing plant. Because of wetlands restrictions, this "solution" is not viable.

Sewer Comm. chairman sums up the May 15 hearing

(These are the concluding comments made by Sewer Commission Chairman Charles DeSantis at the May 15 hearing. Ed.)

The Sewer Commissioners recognize as do all who are here tonight the unique beauty and delicate charm that lives with us here in Cohasset. We believe that the Sewer Commission and all our citizens have a responsibility to ensure for ourselves today and for future generations that our God granted beauty and rich heritage is not buried by the onslaught of urban sprawl, that our quiet streets not fall victim of grid lock, that we not befoul our shore with massive outfalls, and that our restful areas of open space not succomb to continued "asphault assault".

Protecting something as precious as Cohasset requires the eternal vigilance and love of its citizens. In my lifetime the greatest threat to our cherished land has been the 1979 proposed major sewering project. Fortunately, an aroused and informed citizenry refused to embark on such a course which would have led to the instant urbanization of our town. For those of you who question this view, I ask that you look about. Will the alluring appeal which drew many of us to Cohasset exist when Cohasset has a population density of Lynn, Swampscott, Weymouth, Winthrop, Braintree or Revere? Last fall the Planning Board Chairman of Whitman remarked upon the completion of Whitman's sewerage project that density and height restrictions would be relaxed because no longer would the soil limit development. He continued, "when you have development like sewers, it changes the whole town."

I sense that some of us have lost sight or perhaps do not know the goals of our waste water treatment project. These goals do not include the development of undeveloped land. By statute they can't, by intention they will not. These goals do not include the enhancement of commercial land values in undeveloped areas at the tax payers expense.

This plan is a measured response to an existing difficulty. This is not a "Chapter 11" plan such as the M & E plan before it, but rather it is an affordable and environmentally acceptable response to our waste water treatment needs. This plan will solve problems, not create them. With your continued support and resolve we shall soon commence our project which allows us to affordably solve our waste water needs while still controlling future development and growth.

John Pape scholarship recipient

John Pape of the Cohasset Boy Scout/Explorer Post will be its first Memorial Scholarship recipient.

The Memorial Scholarship was recently established to honor Barbara Pape, John's mother, and other Friends of Scouting/Exploring. John, an Eagle Scout has continued to assist Cohasset Boy Scout Troop 28 while also serving as President of the Explorer Post. He will continue his education at Northeastern University. His mother had been a committed supporter of Boy Scouting until her recent untimely death at age 41.

Jane Long, a Troop Committee member, noted the purpose of the Award is to recognize Barbara and other Friends of Troop 28 and also to recognize youth who epitomize the best traditions of Scouting/Exploring. For example, she cited the commitment of Scouts/Explorers to community service projects. During the past year, Scouts/Explorers have supported Civil Defense/Emergency Preparedness Programs, participated in Memorial Day and Town Meeting activities, and accomplished community service projects to include rehabilitating a local cemetery, Wheelwright Park and painting a portion of the interior of the Cohasset Town Hall. Jane commented Scouts/Explorers sometimes must resist peer pressure to pursue their commitment to traditional values of God, Country, Community, and Family.

A fund-raising campaign has been in process and $2,000 has been raised toward an objective of $10,000. Jane is optimistic the goal will be achieved, but noted it has a long way to go in a short time. She expressed concern that many who intended to give have probably been so busy that they have procrastinated or forgotten.

She wanted to remind everyone contributions should be sent to: Troop 28 Memorial Scholarship, Cohasset Savings Bank, Attn: Robert P. Magner, 13 Elm Street, Cohasset, MA 02025.

The Troop Committee expressed its appreciation to local churches who permitted the distribution of flyers. Generous contributions have been made by Jack Conway Realtors, Cohasset Heights, Ltd, Samuel Wakeman, Cohasset Cub Scouts Pack #38, Thomas J. Buckley III, Hingham Mutual Fire Insurance, C.J. CHS students discover the work-a-day world

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

Cohasset High School students are getting a chance to explore different career areas through the career education program.

"We've had about 60 speakers since the program started," said guidance counselor Edward Leonard, who founded the program last year. "We try to give the students a cross-section of careers."

The career education program, for students in ninth through twelfth grade, has two goals according to Leonard.

"One goal is to expose the students to various career possibilities available to them," he said. "Kids in high school sometimes have very little opportunity to know what's available to them.

"Also, there's a motivational aspect," said Leonard. "We want someone who is not an everyday part of the school to show students that what they're studying is relevant to the real world."

The speakers talk to classes during the school day, and are matched to a class whose subject matter pertains to the speaker's career.

"We had a speaker from the Clean Water Action Committee speak to a biology class," said Leonard, "although she could have just as easily spoke to a social studies class, because her career was combination of science and politics."

Leonard said it's important to have somebody from outside the school become involved with the students.

"Students ask me why they have to take a certain Math course or a certain English course, and sometimes I don't think they hear my message," he said. "Then we have a business person come in, and he tells them that people need a math background to be able to understand computers and English for necesary communication skills.

"To have somebody talk to them who is from outside the school makes a tremendous impression on them," he said.

Speakers are recruited with the help of the Parent-School Organization, Leonard said. "Basically, Linda Starmer and Cynthia Hurley of the PSO recruit speakers from the community," he said. "The program would be difficult to run without their involvement."

Some of the speakers have included David Mehegan of the Boston Globe, lawyer David Shumaker, Eileen Mullaney of the Peace Corps, and Kathleen Branigan of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Leonard said a special effort is made to recruit women to speak. "We try to get women who are successful in what students might perceive as male-dominated careers," he said.

"We want the students to see that a typically male-dominated field doesn't have to be that way," said Leonard. "We want them to see that women have better opportunities now. We don't want anyone to limit his or her options because of stereotypes."

Leonard said the typical student probably sees four or five speakers a year. In addition, all the sessions are videotaped by John Packard's television class and are shown on the local cable television channel.

"We've got a whole videotape library of speakers," Leonard said. "It encourages students who missed a particular speaker to do a little research."

Leonard said that the program is beneficial to the speaker as well as the students. "We want the community involved in the schools," he said. "It gives people a chance to see that the school is a pretty good place."

"Some speakers haven't been inside a school for a long time," said Leonard. "Once they come here, they see that things really haven't changed that much.

"I've had speakers come in who say that the school did a lot for their children," Leonard said, "and they're glad to give something back."

Leonard said a key part of the program is starting it in the freshman class. "It's a four-year process from freshmen on up," he said. "We want to increase career awareness, and the process should start in the ninth grade."

"Students begin to take elective courses in their freshman year," he said, "and exposing them to different careers will help them make more informed choices about what to take."

Leonard feels career education should be an ongoing process. "I've tried career days and career weeks," he said, "but they seem to be here one day and gone the next. It's good to remind the students of career options on a regular basis."

Leonard and guidance counselor Mary Babaian will make a presentation about the program at a Massachusetts School Counselors Association conference later this month.

"We're really excited about it," he said. "It's called 'Career Education is Alive and Well in Cohasset'".

Aglow Fellowship meeting

Jana Wacker, noted singer and actress from Chicago, will be entertaining and speaking at the Women Aglow Fellowship luncheon.

The luncheon will be held at Hugo's Lighthouse Restaurant Wednesday June 4 at noon. There will be free babysitting at the Second Congregational Church. All are invited to hear a message and song of joy and peace.

The tickets are $14.00 per person. Tickets may be purchased at the Forget-Me-Not shop in Cohasset or by calling either of these three numbers: 383-9197, 383-1814, 383-1089.

Tennis teams look to end of winning year

By Lisa Shumaker
Mariner Correspondent

GIRLS' TENNIS

The girls started off the week by crushing Sandwich, 4-1. Coach Sue Dalrymple was especially pleased with this victory and felt her team's determination and stamina wore Sandwich down.

Kerri Kirkendall came back after being beaten in the first set and losing, 5-2, in the second set to pull away with a tremendous victory at first singles.

Cohasset Sports

Carolyn O'Brien at second singles also won a tough match in three sets, 7-5, 0-6, 6-4. Jen Chapman after losing her first set came back to dominate the second two sets finally winning 2-6, 6-3, 6-3.

The first doubles team of Linda O'Loughlin and Katie Ryan had the only relatively easy victory of the day as they blew past their opponents, 6-2, 6-4. Lee Sullivan and Karin Anglin at second doubles also played very well losing in a very close match.

Thursday, the girls pulverized East Bridgewater 4-1. Kerri Kirkendall, Carolyn O'Brien and Jen Chapman all had decisive victories. Karin Anglin and Dianne Mascart at second doubles beat their opponents easily.

Unfortunately, after playing two matches in a row, the girls faced an undefeated Scituate team 4-1. Dalrymple attributed the loss to her team's fatigue and Scituate's overwhelming talent. Jen Chapman at third singles was Cohasset's only winner against Scituate. Dalrymple was quick to point out that Jen has been undefeated at her third singles position since she moved there midway through the season.

The girls are now 9-6 and must win two of their last three matches in order to qualify for the state tournament. Dalrymple feels confident her team will do so as they face Rockland on Tuesday, Norwell on Wednesday, and Abington on Thursday.

GIRLS' SOFTBALL

Wednesday, the girls played one of their best games of the season against Sandwich, but unfortunately could not hold onto their lead in the seventh inning and lost 10-9.

Susan Riley led the team on offense with two hits and two RBI's. Susan also scored three of Cohassets nine runs herself. Kristen Ellinger, Debbie Hartley and Toni Cann each had a hit as well.

Thursday the girls lost to East Bridgewater 15-3. Sara Bishop had a great day both on offense and on defense picking up two hits and playing well at catcher. Katie Pyle, Kristen Ellinger, and Lisa Shumaker each had one hit each.

Thursday, the Skippers travelled to Whitman/Hanson and turned in one of their best efforts, but lost 9-3. Sophie Redfield had her varsity pitching debut and did a great job! Kristen Ellinger and Debbie Hartley also played well defensively for the skippers.

Megan Mannion and Toni Cann led the Skippers with two hits a piece. Susan Riley, Lisa Shumaker, Kristen Ellinger, Debbie Hartley and Kara Mannion each picked up a hit a piece.

Track teams finish strong - look to next year

GIRLS' TRACK

The girls finished off their regular season strongly winning their last two meets. Tuesday, the Skippers overwhelmed Hull 98-38. Coach Clare Brady was impressed with her team's effort and was pleased to see Cohasset's hard work finally paying off.

Jen Coley once again led all Skippers with four first place finishes. Liz O'Leary picked up two firsts and two seconds, while both Nancy Riley and Laurel Collins each played first, second, and third in three different events. Nicole Woodland had her first victory ever and had a second place as well. Kay Long also picked up her first win of the season, and Sarah Hamilton had a first place as well.

Second place finishers were Anne O'Leary with three, Kerri Anglin with two, and Dawn Fitzgerald with one.

Leslie Kaefer, Julie Bowdoin, Colby Mantz, Alison Doherty, Michelle Hartley, and Debbie Hartley all were third place finishers for Cohasset.

Thursday, the girls ended the season with a surprising victory over Middleboro. Clare Brady was especially pleased with this win because not only was her team not expected to win, but also many kids finished with their personal best records.

Once again, Jen Coley proved to be the dominant force for Cohasset placing first in all four of her events. This meet marked the sixth time in eight meets that Jen has swept all four of her events. Jen also bettered her own school record in the long jump by two feet, and at the end of this meet, Jen had also shattered the school record of most points scored by an individual in a single track season.

Liz O'Leary had two firsts and a third. Liz also broke a long standing school record in the 880. Anne O'Leary had a first and two seconds, while Nancy Riley had a first and a third. Sarah Hamilton and Colby Mantz also picked up firsts as well.

Amy Sheppard, Laurel Collins, and Kerri Anglin all had seconds. Nicole Woodland, Leslie Kaefer and Dawn Fitzgerald all had thirds. Dawn also broke the junior high record in the 880 .

The girls will now participate in the League meet Wednesday and in the South ShorePrincipalsMeet, Saturday. Brady feels her team should fare well in both of these competitions.

Overall, the team was 4-4. Brady was happy with her team's hard work and diligent effort all season long. Brady also feels her team will be a force to be reckoned with next year in the girls track.

BOYS' TRACK

The boys startedoffthe week by beating Hull 90-55. Coach Jon Anderson was pleased with the victory and felt his entire team did a great job.

First place finishers included Michael Smith, Jim Reidy, Eric Wagner, Ray Rosano, Ian Smart, Dan Camardo, and Ned Chase. The two relay teams consisting of Geoff Christensen, Mike Griever, Kevin Dunn, and John Hall on the first and made up of John Linsley, Matt Buckley, Kevin Dunn, and Ian Smart on the second picked up first places as well.

In their last meet on Thursday, the boys lost a close match to Middleboro 82.5 - 66.5. Anderson felt his team had its best showing of the season and was impressed with the effort he saw.

Jim Reidy, Mike Smith, and Ray Rosano all placed first and had their best times of the year in their respected events. Ned Chase and Dan Camardo also picked up firsts in this meet. The four by 440 relay team consisting of Jim Reidy, Kevin Dunn, Ian Smart, and John Linsley won, and the four by 110 relay team of Geoff Christensen, Mike Griever, John Hall, and Kevin Dunn also won with its best time of the year.

Overall the boys were 3-5 a record which has been consistent with the past couple of years. This record was better than Anderson hoped for considering his team's lack in numbers and experience.Anderson also pointed out that Cohasset showed tremendous improvement over the year and hopefully this improvement will carry over until next year.

BOYS' TENNIS

Tuesday, the boys started off the week by pulling out a tough victory over Scituate, 3-2. The three

Pack 38 scouting news. . .

The Old Mills District Dinner, honoring those who contributed their time and talents to scouting was held at the Rockland Sons of Italy, May 9.

Those who received recognition were: for Pack 38 Cub Scouts, Linda Farrag and for Troop 28 Boy Scouts, John Bryant. The Explorer Post 28 Advisor award of recognition went to Joanne Lehr and a plaque for the Explorer Post 28 award went to Joanne and Philip Lehr. Arthur Lehr, who is serving with the Boy Scouts and Explorers, will receive a silver jacket as a special thank you from the district. Everyone attending enjoyed the evening.

Don't forget the Cub Adventure Camp from July 28 to August 1 at Wheelwright Park, Cohasset, from 9 to 3. It is hosted by the Old Mills District for its ten towns. The cost is $20 for five days. (Mail to the Old Colony Council, 2438 Washington St., Canton, MA 02021. The camp will include games, crafts, sports ceremonies and other daily special events. All Tiger Cubs and Cub Scouts are welcome.

May 26 is the Memorial Day Parade.

- Scouts meet at 10:30 a.m. in uniform at the Osgood School parking lot.
- We will march to Central Cemetery on No. Main St. to Cohasset Common and will end at Cohasset Harbor.

Troop 28 Boy Scouts—would like to thank Pack 38 for their donation of $100 towards the Troop 28 Memorial Scholarship, in memory of Barbara Pape. (Anyone who would like to contribute their tax deductible donation can be sent to the Cohasset Savings Bank, 13 Elm Street, Cohasset, Mass. Att: Robert Magner). One or more annual scholarships will be awarded to Cohasset Boy Scouts or Explorers who continue to actively support Troop/Post 28 through graduation from high school. Scouts going on to college or vocational schools will be eligible.

Barbara Pape, a strong supporter of Cohasset Boy Scout Troop 28, died recently at age 41. At the time of her death, she was chairperson of the Troop 28 Country Fair, the annual fund raising activity of the Cohasset Boy Scouts. Although Barbara was a Scituate resident, she had enrolled her son John in Troop 28 where he advanced to the highest rank in Scouting, an Eagle. John remains active in supporting the Cohasset Boy Scouts and is president of Cohasset Explorer Post 28.

The Troop Committee voted unanimously to establish a scholarship fund in her memory.

Graduation invitations

Under the auspices of the PSO, engraved invitations/announcements are available to members of the CHS class of 1986. They cost 50 cents per invitation. Checks should be made payable to the PSO. Invitations are available in the CHS main office now.

These invitations are not necessary for admittance to any graduation related activity. They do add a nice touch to commencement exercises, provide a means of inviting relatives and friends and/or make for a momento.

Murphy II

April 24 Mrs. Hibbard a fifth grade teacher at Deer Hill School retired. Also on April 24, Mrs. Murphy, an experienced teacher, came to take Mrs. Hibbard's place. Mrs. Murphy is a very nice teacher who has taught in many other states in the United States.

Many kids at Deer Hill School seem to get confused with Mrs. Murphy our new teacher and Mrs. Murphy our school librarian. But the kids at Deer Hill School, including me, have worked out our ways.

In my opinion Mrs. Murphy and Mrs. Murphy are both wonderful teachers and I'm sure most all the other fifth graders at Deer Hill School agree with me.

Peek at the Past

The answer to the previous Peek at the Past photo was guessed correctly by A.J. Antoine, G.H. Dean of No. Palm Beach, Fla., and Joanne Cogill. It was the Cohasset Lobster Shop at the Cove where Harbor Liquors is now located. The shop was owned by the Pattison family and included in the photo was Harry Pattison, John Pattison, a small boy and Paul Pattison.

recognized as a superb writer," he noted.

From his conversations with Warner Brothers, Rev. Atkinson said the screenplay will differ somewhat from the novel. The scene with the "rather weak" minister will not be included in the film version.

"There is a very heavy sermon delivered by the main character (Jack Nicholson) at the end. It's not a sermon I'd particularly like to listen to - it's contrary to our point of view. But that will be in the movie." he continued. There's also a memorial service to be filmed in the church after the death of one character.

"I expect the contract will arrive this week," Rev. Atkinson stated. "Apparently Cohasset is considered the prime location after Little Compton turned them down.

"This town has said it will be receptive and the church congregation is comfortable with it," he noted.

"We were never looking at this as an economic resource," Rev. Atkinson continued. "If these people want to use the church, fine. But we would expect them to help us out."

The church's pastor agreed a contribution to the restoration project would be heartily accepted by eager church members.

"I asked one of the film executives last week if they were really looking at us for the film, and he said, 'oh yes. You're our prime location.' So, I'd assume within a week or two we'll have confirmation on that," he stated.

A spokesman for the state fim bureau said Warner Brothers officials remain in Boston scouting locations for the film. "We're still in the running," Terry Morris stated. "We feel that after next Sunday we'll know. We expect to have an answer within the week."

At that time, Little Compton, R.I. is scheduled to give a final decision to the film producers.

"There's still hope," she added.

'Just Like An Artist's Shower'

By T. Kasperowicz
Special to the Mariner

"Whispers and Shadows," the CHS literary publication, has arrived. You can purchase your copy at the Paul Pratt Library, or at Cards 'n Shards, in the Village. The proceeds of the sales will be used for future (Oh, I hope so!) publications.

We, none of us, know what they think, what they're learning, until they write — until they express — until they visualize the future which they are, for us. The artists and writers who worked on this publication had many decisions to make. They had the annoying problem of not being able to include everything they wished to include, because of financial constraints. And now that they are published, formally printed by a commercial printer, they will examine placement, the graphic quality of their submissions (physical properties) and learn.

Colleen Lucas and Jo-Ellen Wood served as advisors to the publication.

As an advisor to this publication at the onset, I am a little more excited about what they have learned from this publication. . .than I am about their artistry. No one has ever questioned their ability to think, to motivate, to express and to express well their feelings. Now they have had the unique opportunity of seeing their very own production come to life.

Bryan Ormiston's and Michelle Stone's artistry combined for a page supreme. I happened to be present when Allison Kornet decided these two artists would be perfect together. Stone's poem is lovely in its simplicity:

ALONE

I stand alone

No one to talk to
No one to listen

I ask myself
Why must I stand alone?

Am I cruel. . .
Am I rude. . .

Or is it simply. . .
As a rule -

that I stand alone.

The art and artists which pulled at my heartstrings were as follows: Hilary Proodian did a New York Times Magazine graphics in the center of the publication (the pages are not numbered, the advisor's recommendation was not taken). Dudley Bryan's "hands" are as beautiful as is his "The Big Loud Noise" poem with accompanying art. Dudley does it all. Jen Hynes produced a very lovely graphic portrait. . .while Susan Young's horses truly demonstrated power, largeness, greatness.

It should be noted this critical review is being written by a gal who 24 years ago completely messed up her high school yearbook because she didn't know any better. She cropped heads off pictures, didn't proofread, never planned for the pages to have margins, and at every high school reunion people remember what she did. In fact, her former classmates show up with their yearbooks and delight in showing her how awful it was. . .for 24 years.

The frontspiece for "Whispers and Shadows" is a self-portrait by Leah Burbank. Burbank has another excellent portrait rendering within the publication.

You would not be surprised to find author James Patrick Walsh's "If It Were Not For A Few Good Men" in any published anthology of short stories. In many respects, it is more of a playlet than a short story. Upon reading it, I had a large desire to see it produced. It would not be beyond Walsh's ability to do so. I wonder if, upon reading these words, he will consider a play.

I have saved my comments about author/poet Alison Crehan for last. A frosh, her teachers suspect Crehan has enough material for her own literary publication. She is an experienced writer and editor. . .who polishes and weaves her words with a skill which has nothing to do with maturity, and everything to do with wisdom. Her poetry is precise. But her prose ("The Campaign"), a literary form she has only recently attempted, shows the power and plot of a true storyteller.

A portion of Poet Neely Hemassi's poem expresses my feelings about this collection best:

Just like an artist's shower. . .

I can see where these people are going. I wish I could go with them.

The Dump - What next

By Cindy Bell

(The Mariner will be publishing the four essays which were judged the best in the Gilbert Tower contest at CHS. All essays concerned a community planning topic, and were written by members of the AP history class. Ed.)

Five years ago, in 1981, the town of Cohasset realized, that within the next ten years, it would need a new method for waste disposal. With the present landfill nearing its full capacity, and the town having no land area truly suitable for another landfill, the Board of Health requested that the Selectmen appoint a Dump Study Committee, composed of five interested Cohasset residents. Their job was to:

- Review previous waste disposal data and evaluate it to find if it is still pertinent.
- Evaluate the Resource Recovery System in Plainville.
- Evaluate large land areas in Cohasset, that may be suitable for a landfill.
- Evaluate G.S.A. (Government Services Administration), for a possible resource recovery system.
- Report monthly to the Board of Selectmen on progress made.

The committee's research and studies revealed that most suitable alternatives to landfills were incineration and resource recovery. With the added benefit of extracting energy in the form of steam or electricity, or process solid wastes to produce solid or liquid fuel, makes resource recovery the preferred alternative. However, the only successful resource recovery plant in the region at this time, was the RESCO plant in Saugus, a town too far away to be economical for Cohasset. Because of the high interest rates, and the low population density in many of the Southeastern towns in Massachusetts, it would be economically unfeasible to build a resource recovery plant in this area, involving nearby towns.

SEMASS (Southeastern Mass), a proposed facility of Energy Answers Corporation in Albany, New York, gave answers to most of the economic and health problems surrounding the dump issue. The SEMASS plant, which is now a reality, is located in Rochester, Massachusetts, and serves towns throughout five southeastern counties. It is a resource recovery plant, turning waste into energy. The proposed plan received much praise, and interest, while also gathering a large number of prospective clients. Among these interested clients was Cohasset, encouraged by the Dump Study Committee. However, even with much support from the town, Cohasset decided to join SEMASS too late, and was put on the waiting list. It was not until Nov./Dec. of 1985, that Cohasset was informed that there was no room left.

Unfortunately this blow set Cohasset back a few steps. Although the Planning Board possessed much information, they didn't have, and still don't have, an immediate backup plan, as well as much time. There are many reasons why this problem must be dealt with as soon as possible, but the most important, are health concerns. Many hazards can arise from a poorly built, or overflowing landfill. One is the problem of the contamination of groundwater through leachate, and old dumping practices. This is caused when waste and contaminated or toxic materials leache into the groundwater. If groundwater is contaminated, then well water is contaminated. Fortunately for Cohasset, our water needs are not dependent upon wells. Another problem is methane-gas production, which is not ventilated out, is flammable and even explosive. Finally, there is the concern for the degredation of the air quality, caused by volatile wastes, emitting vapors into the air. The situation is also aggravated by the fair amount of developing that has occurred along Forest Avenue, Cedar Street, and Pond Street, leading to an influx of people, a larger population, and more solid waste. Hopefully, this setback will not discourage the Dump Study Committee to continue the search for an environmentally safe, and economical method (such as resource recovery) for disposing of our solid wastes.

"Go back and get your father," Michael Coates explains to his catch as fishing buddy Tom Lavoie tries his luck.

Health board rejects Sweeney's home den of his Elm Street apartment. "But that's the only option we have left."

Nancy figured the couple has handed over more than $15,000 in engineering and legal assistance. "There's not much more we can spend, but we're going to appeal this," Nancy confirmed.

The health board ruled last week, that despite a previous decision which allowed the Sweeney's a "manifest injustice," they would not be allowed the necessary variances needed to rebuild a septic system on the family's property at 21 Bow Street.

The hardship determination was made by the health board in 1985. In effect, that ruling allows a person to rebuild a system even though three years have passed since the system was functioning. The health board members said they understood why Sweeney could not previously rebuild on the lot, and granted him the extension which nullified the time limit.

"I figured, if we can go to the moon, someone should be able to make a septic system that conforms to state and local laws as closely as possible," Nancy stated.

In effect, Sweeney explained, hardship prevented him from rebuilding. Now they were no longer contained by the three-year limit.

In the meantime, engineers for the Sweeneys worked to develop a septic system plan which would conform as closely as possible to state and town code specifications.

The property is located on a non comforming lot.

"I figured, if we can go to the moon, someone should be able to make a septic system that conforms to state and local laws as closely as possible," Nancy stated.

A former classmate of Walter agrees. Charles DeSantis, chairman of the sewer commission and a close buddy of the former Cohasset High School athlete, agreed the latest septic plan developed by the Sweeneys' engineer "is 98 percent better than most of the systems in town today. This is better than the ancient system that was on the property before," he said.

Sweeney nodded in agreement, adding in his youth he never recalled problems with the former non conforming septic system. "Bobby Pape worked on our system when I was living there. He told me there were never any problems on our property," he added.

DeSantis said his concern stemmed not only from his long friendship with Sweeney - he worries about his own home. "I'm on a non conforming lot too," he said this week. "If Walter and Nancy are not allowed to rebuild a home destroyed by fire, then most of the home owners in this community are at a frightful risk. If Walter and Nancy can not rebuild, then most homeowners in this community will not be able to rebuild if their home is destroyed by fire! This interpretation of policy is definitely not in anyone's best interest and must be corrected or the majority of homeowners in this town stand the same risk as the Sweeney's - losing their home!" DeSantis stated in a letter addressed to the health board this week.

In its decision last week, the health board voted to approve a total of ten variances to rebuild the septic system at 21 Bow Street. They denied three of the requested variances. In effect, according to health agent Joseph Godzik, by denying three variance requests the board has disappproved the entire plan.

In its decision, the health board stated the retaining wall proposed by Perkins Engineering on the property would not afford the same degree of environmental protection "in lieu of the slope requirements. The retaining wall was less than twenty feet from the proposed sewage disposal system in some areas. This does not meet the verbal recommendation received from the Water Pollution Control Division of the Northeast Region of the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering."

Variance number six was denied by the board which requires a seventy-five foot setback from coastal wetlands. The board members decided the

In its conclusion, the board noted the Sweeneys may seek relief through the court system within 30 days of the decision.

"same degree of environmental protection could not be afforded since a greater distance between the coastal wetlands and the sewage disposal system affords a greater opportunity for removal of or degradation of organic contaminants and certain heavy metals."

The third variance was denied by the board which required the depth of pervious materials. In its denial the board said state health code Title Five "is very specific in requiring at least a four-foot depth of naturally occurring pervious soil."

In its conclusion, the board noted the Sweeneys may seek relief through the court system within 30 days of the decision.

A longtime native of the town, Richardson White, is angered by the board's decision.

"I'm against the whole principal of buildings allowed to be built in Cohasset today," he said while sitting in the studio of his Jerusalem Road farm. A native of Cohasset, White is troubled by the board's actions against the Sweeneys.

"This is grossly unfair for the board not to allow Walter the right to rebuild on his grandfather's land. When the town for years has allowed developers to build on Little Harbor, and they won't allow someone to rebuild a home lost in a fire, it's unfair."

There are homes in this town, he said, allowed to be constructed along marshland and on ledge. Homes along Atlantic Avenue and Jerusalem Road have recently been constructed with retaining walls, with wholehearted approval by the health board.

"I knew Walter's grandfather, he was my father's age and Walter's father worked for me. His brothers also worked for me for a time," White said. "He's an singles players, Rich Reddick, Chris Ryan and Fred Wilshire all won and gave Cohasset the points needed for the victory. Coach Ed Amaral was impressed with the way in which these three boys played.

Wednesday, the Skippers suffered a disappointing loss to Sandwich, 3-2. Rich Reddick and Chris Ryan both did a great job of pulling off victories. Jason Marsac and Gred Wallingford at second doubles lost a tough three set match, but Amaral was still happy with the way these boys never gave up.

Thursday, Cohasset squeezed by Hanover, 3-2. Amaral was especially pleased with this victory since he teaches in Hanover. The boys had lost to Hanover previously, but this time Fred Wilshire pulled out a big victory which turned the tables over to Cohasset's favor this time around.

Along with Fred's victory came Chris Ryan's and the second doubles team's consisting of Stephen Myers and Jason Marsac. Amaral cited these four boys as playing exceptionally well for Cohasset.

Monday the boys shut out Hull impressively, 5-0. This decisive victory made Cohasset's overall record 12-3.

The Skippers have three more matches until the state tournament begins next Tuesday. Tuesday the boys face Rockland and Wednesday they play Abington. Thursday, Cohasset has a crucial match aginst Norwell which will determine the first place finisher in the South Shore League. Overall Amaral feels his team has a strong chance of capturing the league title on Thursday.

BASEBALL

The boys had a pretty good week winning two games and losing only one. Wednesday night the Skippers pulled out a close one against Sandwich, 4-3. Sean Corkery led the team from the mound pitching the entire game and striking out five batters. The kev to this victory was Cohasset's solid defense and timely hitting.

Pete Sandblom led the Skippers with two hits followed by Bob Shultz, Todd Fitzpatrick, Jamie Roy and David Shultz who each had one.

Thursday, the boys traveled to East Bridgewter and lost a heartbreaker to East Bridgewater in the seventh inning. Because of Todd Henry's thunderous three run home run in the seventh inning, Cohasset was winning by three going into the bottom of the seventh. Unfortunately, East Bridgewater came back to score four devastating runs and won the game. Todd Henry led the team offensively with a homerun and a single. Philip Mahoney also had a great day up at bat going three for three. Bob Shultz, Todd Fitzpatrick, and Glen Bernstein each had a hit also.

Friday the boys bounced back from the loss to beat Scituate 9-8. Mike Gentile pitched very well for the Skippers, and Sean Corkery had a good relief inning on the mound as well.

admirable character. He almost wrecked his life and he's brought himself back here. He's stronger than most people."

DeSantis agreed with White's assessment and noted, "a few years ago at the corner of Rust Way and Jerusalem Road an "abandoned" subsurface system was rebuilt. This occurred long after three years of abandonment. In this case, hardship was declared by the Board of Health and construction was permitted. Variances were allowed providing equivalent protection was obtained," DeSantis continued. "Walter and Nancy and all the citizens of this town ask no more than was granted this dwelling."

Selectman Rocco Laugelle, another longtime admirer of Walt Sweeney, expressed his concern for the former high school and college standout. "He has tremendous courage. He deserves a lot of credit for what he's doing. I'd hate to see him go back to California.

"But I think the health board was fair in its hearing last week," he continued. "I asked that they give the Sweeneys' every consideration. I think they'll be alright."

Chatterton, athletic director for the Cohasset school system, understood there are rules and regulations the health board must follow. "But you look at some houses built here. That one on the corner of Gammons and Jerusalem Road - the foundation looks like something from The Guns of Navarone. I feel strongly because I grew up with Walter. But the town should also consider the type of person he is. He's spent hundreds of hours talking to kids and parents about the dangers of drugs. He's amazing at what he does. Anywhere he speaks, you can hear a pin drop," he stated.

DeSantis has requested the board reopen the hearing. "These concerns have to be aired. I'm alarmed and worried and everyone else in town should be, too. If my house burns down, I'm in deep trouble.Because even if it is ruled a hardship case, if I can't build to the exact code - and ninety percent of all septic systems in this town don't meet code - then myself and the rest of this town are in dire straits."

Sweeney explained he intends to reconstruct a two-bedroom home with a single bath. That will replace a four bedroom, two bathroom structure once located on the lot.

"A 50-60 gallon per day system should not take the efforts of a Metcalf and Eddy, Camp, Dresser and McKee and the law firms of State Street to design," DeSantis said.

The current proposed septic system will cost about $30,000 to construct, Sweeney estimated.

In the meantime, while their attorney prepares an appeal of the health board ruling, the Sweeneys continue to pay a substantial monthly rent. They will spend more on legal fees and engineering costs.

Sweeney, whose grandfather, James Michael was born in Cohasset in 1869, continues to dream about rebuilding his family's home.

"It means everything to me," he said. "I jog by there every morning and first I get real mad, then it starts tearing me up. I love Cohasset. This place means everything to me."

The former All Pro football player admitted he and Nancy started their trek home alone. "You can't imagine how much it's meant to us to see all our friends and neighbors supporting us," he added. "It really means a lot and I want to thank them."

A CHS student tribute to Assistant Principal 'Mr. Di'

(The following essays and poems were written this year by Cohasset High School students about Assistant Principal Gino DiGirolamo. Ed.)

"Mr. Di" makes kids feel reassured

What is it about Mr. DiGirolamo that everybody loves? It's difficult to find a student at C.H.S. who doesn't love Mr. Di. One student spoke out saying, "He loves us kids — that's why we love him." Kristin Ellinger says "There is a quality about him that I really can't explain, but everyone really loves and respects him — Even while he's sending a student to detention, somehow that student knows that Mr. Di cares about him. He is the kind of person that most of us would like to be like when we grow up — a great role model."

Matt Drinkwater says, "Mr. Di is firm and strict, yet caring and humble. He's a little shy, yet funny when we hear him over the public address system in the morning. He makes us feel safe." Most of the students in our poll mentioned that they felt secure and safe knowing that he is in the building.

"Being vice principal isn't just a job; it's a way of life and love." Letitia Linsley said, "I like Mr. Di because he makes me feel protected whenever I see him. I feel as if no one can harm me if he is our vice principal. Jennifer Martin agrees, "Mr. Di is always there to make sure everything is O.K. He is a kind, warm, and sweet man who cares about everyone in his school and treats everyone equally. Since he loves kids, it's wonderful that he is coach of the girls' varsity field hockey team." Scott Flaherty comments, "Mr. Di treats everyone fairly and equally, and he never puts anyone down. He loves children and he shows it. I feel reassured when I see him in the hall." Abbi Barrett thinks of Mr. Di as "The King of the School" because he knows everybody and seems to run everything. "I bet," says Abbie, "if we didn't have Mr. Di, our school would fall apart."

Melissa Nothnagle adds, "He treats us fairly and makes us feel more important than just a bunch of little kids he has to chase around the school. He treats us like individuals (with all our individual problems), and he always has a "hello" for everybody in the hallway which always gives me a little lift." Katie Ryan says, "No one is a loser to Mr. Di — each one is a winner!"

I love Mr. Di, because he's a funny, kind man, who always knows how to cheer someone's day up, when I walk down the hall and see him, not only do I feel protected, by his strong body, but I also feel good inside to see his bright smile. He always knows everybody by name, and I think he knows everybody's family, too. I can tell that he loves kids by the way he treats them. He's strict at times — but soft at othertimes. He always makes me laugh and smile. It's good to have a vice-principal whom you not only respect and admire as a "teacher," but also, more importantly, as a friend.

By Katie Murray

Mr Di, always looks happy
is willing to listen to you at any time and gives you his full attention doesn't talk down to kids is interested in what you and your family are doing knows your name doesn't get you confused with other family members!!!! is always around so you feel he's there if you need him
treats everyone equally, no prejudices

By Celia Mullen

I love Mr. Di because he is one of the few teachers who seems to really care about the kids and enjoy being with them. He takes part in the activity that we put on and he helps us without bossing us around. When someone gets in trouble, he is rough with them, but I think that smartens the kid up. A lot of the kids think, "Well before I do this, I better remember I've got to answer to Mr. Di." Also, he is a strong figure to all of us. Everyone likes him, respects him and looks up to him. He looks at all kids as equals. It doesn't matter how many friends we have or what, he just looks at you for who you are.

He also has something about him that everyone looks up to, but he doesn't act like he is at a higher level. He talks to us eye-to-eye.

By Alison Reilly

Gino DiGirolamo

Reasons why I like Mr. Di:
1. Treats everyone fairly and equally.
2. Feel reassured when you see him in the hall.
3. Never puts anyone down.
4. Loves children and shows it.
5. Friendly.

By Scott Flaherty

Mr. Di has many great characteristics. He seems to love all us kids, and that in turn makes us love him. He's always ready with an open smile and a hearty laugh, that helps people feel better about themselves. He relates to kids very well and can talk at our level, which makes it such an easy task to talk with him.

There is a quality about him, which I really can't explain, but everyone, teachers included, really respect him. Even if he should yell at you, there's something about him that lets you know he cares, even while sending you to detention, It seems like everyone looks up to him, but he doesn't look down on us, which I think is great. He seems to be the kind of person that many people would choose as an idol, someone they'd like to grow up to be like.

By K. Ellinger

Mr. D.
1. Protective
2. Caring
3. Friendly

By Mike Figueiredo

When Mrs. Burbank told us that barely anyone has ever thanked Mr. Di or told him what a good vice principal he is, I couldn't believe it. Every morning and afternoon I love hearing his happy, cheerful voice over the loud speaker saying all the events and jobs available. He always manages to add a joke in there somewhere even if I don't get it, it still makes me smile to know that at least he's trying. When I see him roaming the halls with an angry look on his face looking for some wrong-doer I know that really deep inside he loves the kid and really cares. I think of him like the king of the school, because he knows everybody and seems to me as if he runs everything. I bet if we didn't have him our school would fall apart because all the kids respect him even if he yells at them. If he didn't yell, and was quiet I doubt anyone would respect him much and probably think he was a push-over. That is why I am really glad to have a vice principal like Mr. Di.

Just a simple nice person

Dear Mr. Di,

Just wanted to tell you how much you really mean to everyone at CHS. You're a terrific person, and I can tell that you like what you're doing. You treat us fairly, and makes us feel more important than just a bunch of little kids you have to chase around the school. You treat us like individuals (with all of our individual problems), and you always have a "hello" for everyone in the hallway. Keep it up; it always gives me a little lift. We all understand that it's your job to keep us in line and that you punish us only because you care for us, and we think that you deserve a lot more credit than we could ever give you.

We love ya, Mr. Di!

By Melissa Nothnagle

Mr. Di is a really nice guy for many reason:

1. He cares. Many teachers just do the job for the money but Mr. Di really cares. Even if it means taking risks.
2. He is always kind and nice.
3. The most important aspect about Mr. Di is that he treats you like an equal. He doesn't put his power over your head. To him, you are a friend and a peer. Not just some kid to threaten.
4. If you need help go to Mr. Di he's always open to you and you know he wants to help.
5. Not only is Mr. Di the vice-principal, he is also a math tutor, which he doesn't have to do.

Mr. Di is everyone's friend. No one is a loser to him. We're all winners and he's our leader.

By Katie Ryan

Why I like Mr. Di
He is good and kind
He likes his work and so he is happy every day.
He cares about kids
He wants to be a good influence
Kids respect him so he does have a good influence.
He is there when you need him.
He understands you.
He will protect you.
He respects you as a person not as a nameless face.

By F. Bartow

1. I like Mr. Di because he makes me feel protected whenever I see him. I feel like no one can harm me when I am near him.
2. I like Mr. Di because he really cares — to him, being vice principal isn't just a job, it's a way of life and love.

FROM THE KITCHEN

Celebrate Memorial Day with outdoor cooking

The three-day Memorial weekend is sure to be a lively one; so much to do at this time of the year.

It's always nice to catch the parade somewhere along its route as scouts and service organizations step out to the lively music of the high school band.

No need to mention to New Englanders how hard it is to plan on the weather, but we can plan and shop ahead for meals that we can take outdoors to the picnic table if Mother Nature will just cooperate.

This recipe serves 10 to 12 and I don't know how many times I've made it since Ruth Henderson sent it along for the column in August of 1974.

As she wrote: "It's a delicious party dish for a buffet or cookout," so good it's worth a second printing.

POTATOES SUPREME

2 lbs. frozen potatoes O'Brien (Ore-Ida)
1 pt. sour cream
1/2 c. melted margarine
1 can cream chicken soup
1 large pkg. shredded Mozzarella cheese
1 tsp. salt and pepper, mixed

Mix all ingredients and put into 9x13" pan. Crumble 2 cups corn flakes and add an additional 1/4 c. margarine, melted. Spread this topping over all and bake one hour at 375 degrees.

If you are baking for the holiday weekend, this old standby from Rachel Roberts can be made way ahead of time, frozen and served for breakfast. Sometimes you can set the breakfast table early in the morning and let everyone help themselves whenever they choose. Coffee keeping warm on the stove, juice, fruit and cereal set out with the necessary dishes and this coffee cake big enough for seconds.

SOUR CREAM COFFEE CAKE

1 c. sugar
2 eggs
1 c. sour cream
1 tsp. vanilla
Add, sifted together:
2 c. flour
1 tsp. ea. soda and baking powder
1/2 tsp. salt

Put half mixture in angel food pan. Sprinkle 1/2 of brown sugar mixture over. Add rest of batter-top with remaining mix. Bake 350 degrees for 40 min.

BROWN SUGAR MIXTURE

1/3 c. brown sugar
1 tsp. cinnamon
1/2 c. chopped nuts

The merry month of May started out not so very merry weather-wise, but every now and then we're teased with a few rays of sunshine and all's right with the world. On days we are out scratching in the dirt, planting our petunias and sitting back to enjoy our handiwork, it' a nice feeling to know that back in the oven, simmering away, is the casserole you prepared first thing in the morning. With a salad and garlic bread, what could be tastier than Janice Clay's

CHICKEN-STRING BEAN CASSEROLE

1 layer stuffing mix or seasoned croutons
1 pkg. French-style green beans, (cooked)
2 cans mushroom pieces, drained
1 layer cooked, diced chicken (2 cups)
1 can ea. cream of mushroom and cream of chicken soup, mixed
1 can of French-fried onion rings

Put layers in buttered casserole in order listed, topping with mixture of the two soups. Sprinkle onion rings over top. Heat at 350 degrees, 25 or 30 min.

DARE Family Services needs home for Kenya

Kenya is a very bright, likeable and articulate black adolescent female. Kenya is the mother of a healthy two-month-old baby girl. At this time, Kenya is not ready to be a mother. She must first stabilize her own behavior and accept some responsibility for her own actions. Kenya's life is at a critical juncture. It is an opportunity to explore some positive options. To this end, Kenya needs a long-term stable and nurturant home.

Kenya is a teenager with lots of potential and her share of troubles too. When in school, Kenya is an A and B level student. She has the intelligence to move onto college. Right now, Kenya is out of school and her motivation to achieve academic success is questionable. Kenya's past experience with prostitution and sexual abuse present serious problems to overcome. When out on her own, Kenya can be very manipulative. Kenya's behavior is illustrative of her low level of self-esteem.

Still, Kenya responds well to structure and clear limits. A recent six month placement in a group home for unwed mothers was very successful. It was a safe place for Kenya to make friends and to act her age. In the future, Kenya will need more of the same to help break some old family patterns. Kenya will benefit from a strong, positive black female role model. Initially, Kenya will demand much attention and care. When Kenya is ready to accept the responsibility of motherhood, she will need much guidance and support around infant care and parenting. Until that time, Kenya's baby will remain with a relative. The top priority now is to get Kenya off the street and into a stable family environment.

Kenya loves music and dancing. She enjoyed cooking for the other girls and staff in the residential program. It will be important for Kenya to build upon these interests as well as her strengths: intelligence, initiative, a good sense of humor and a willingness to work hard.

If you have room in your home and your heart for an adolescent like Kenya, please call Don Moskowitz of DARE Family Services at 628-3696. Professional training and support together with medical coverage and a financial reimbursement of $42 a day are available.

The Dragon's Dungeon — By Claire McDonough

Little things mean a lot for this interview

Breida swept through the front door and flung her arms wide.

"This house has to be cleaned by Monday night," she announced.

Her brother shrugged. "So, clean it."

She looked disappointed. "Doesn't anybody want to know why it has to be cleaned by Monday night? Doesn't anyone wonder who might be coming here Monday?"

"Okay," the Dragon said amiably, "who's coming Monday evening?"

She paused for dramatic effect. "The press will be here, in our house, Monday evening."

I looked at her blankly. "I am the press," I reminded her.

"She doesn't mean you," the Dragon told me. "Probably the Washington Post or the New York Times wants to interview me. She's right. This house has to be cleaned by Monday night."

"What makes you think it's you?" I asked. "I'm not without a certain measure of fame you know. My guess is that the Boston Globe wants to do a feature on me for their Sunday supplement. Do you suppose we could get the house painted and buy a new car by then? And, um, Honey, do you think you could manage to look distinguished, with just a touch of cynicism?"

Skip affected a casual tone. "I don't imagine it's occurred to anyone that a moderately awesome wrestler lives at this house, and that the media may well be interested in talking to me?"

Breida threw her hands up in the air. "You're not paying attention. As usual. I've been trying to tell you that the selectmen just appointed me to the Vo Tech School Committee. And a reporter is coming here Monday to interview me. But do you listen? Noooo. Painting the house, buying the car, and having Daddy look distinguished aren't bad ideas, though."

I jumped to my feet. "Baby! Congratulations!"

She winced. "Did you have to use that word?"

I put an arm around her. "We're so proud of you. But I really wish you had let Daddy and me go to the meeting with you."

Breida looked at me. "Moth-er," (I always know I'm in trouble when she calls me "Moth-er") "I feel I have an adequate experiential, organizational, educational, and practical background for this appointment. I also feel I have the ability to perform my responsibilities, and I know I have the common sense to seek advice when I need it. My real drawback is that while the only other applicant, in addition to being a nice man with a good deal of experience and a background in banking, is the father of a family, I am nineteen and look twelve.

"When the company I work for sent me to conduct a training workshop for one of their client firms, the lady at the desk thought I was selling Girl Scout cookies.

"Now, bearing all this in mind, how do you think it would have looked if I had walked into the selectmen's meeting with my mother and my father?"

"You have a point," I admitted. "I have the same problem myself. People often mistake me for a teenager. Such a nuisance.

"What color do you think we should paint the house?"

The Dragon glared at us. "We are not going to paint the house." He paused. "We could give some thought to a new car, though. Just to compliment my distinguished air and touch of cynicism."

Skip shook his head. "I think we're making a big mistake. I think Breida should go back to the selectmen, and you and Dad should go with her."

We looked at him. "What good would that do? Would this convince them that she's a mature young lady and that she has the experiential, organizational, educational, and practical background to do a superb job on the school committee?"

He shrugged. "No. But they might give her a megabig order for Girl Scout cookies."

'The Rainmaker' is a charmer at Nickerson

By Judith Montminy
Special to the Mariner

THEATRE REVIEW

The final production of the Nickerson Theatre's 85-86 subscription season is a gentle, romantic version of N. Richard Nash's play, "The Rainmaker."

The story of the Curry family, living on a farm in the midwest during a summer drought, is a charmer.

H.C. Curry and his two sons, Noah and Jim, want to marry off the only girl in the family, Lizzie.

They even send Lizzie off to visit relatives who have eligible bachelor sons.

But Lizzie is not cut out to be a mindless farmer's wife. She has intelligence; she has spunk; she has a keen sense of reality. What she doesn't have is hope—she's a plain-looking woman in a society that doesn't value women for their intellect.

Enter Starbuck, a peddler of dreams, who brings promises of love as well as rain to the Curry Farm. Lizzie calls him a con-man and a liar, but her father and brother Jim decide to take a chance—just in case Starbuck can bring them luck and rain.

Eventually Lizzie finds renewal when Starbuck shows her the value of her own dreams and uniqueness. He gives her hope and belief in herself.

"The Rainmaker" has become an American classic, immortalized by Burt Lancaster and Katherine Hepburn in the film version. Because "The Rainmaker" is so familiar, many productions of the play fall into the trap of presenting stock interpretations of the characters.

In the Nickerson production, however, director Judy Braha had led her actors toward multi-levelled, refreshing interpretations.

Sandra Shipley is a well-controlled, complex Lizzie. She captures Lizzie's unconventional and straightforward manner, and successfully blends it with Lizzie's subtle expectations and disappointments. She grows beautiful as hope is restored to her life.

For one day she believes she is pretty and loved. For once she is impractical and impulsive, under the influence of Starbuck—the teller of tall tales, the bringer of rain.

As Lizzie's older brother Noah, Timothy Wheeler lends a gentleness to his character that is not often seen. Noah is the practical one, in charge of running the farm. He knows that Lizzie is "plain" and that she doesn't know how to "get a man the way he gets got." His feet are firmly rooted in reality; Noah has no time for dreams.

Yet Wheeler brings a sense of caring and vulnerability to Noah that is endearing. His impatience with his father and younger brother Jimmy comes from a deep commitment to his family, not from anger.

As the easy-going father, H.C. Curry, Niels Miller slides into his role as if he's worn it many times before. Jared Waye is a little less comfortable with the part of Jim Curry, the happy-go-lucky teenager who is out for a good time. His energy is inconsistent and seems forced during the first part of Act I. It is not until Act II that Waye settles into his character and delights many in the audience.

Steve Aveson's Starbuck suffers by comparison to the strength of the Curry family. He is the outsider, the bundle of energy in a town that is taking life slowly. The tender moments with Lizzie are fine, when he is telling her stories to make her believe in herself.

But he seems out of proportion when he is talking about what he can do—when he describes the dreams he can bring to life. Aveson crouches down then pops up in a way that is supposed to make him appear larger than life. The effect, however, if often too bouncy. He captures the spirit of Starbuck, but not always the physical presence of the rainmaker.

David Zoffoli as the deputy File and Norman Goodman as the sheriff work well off each other. Although Zoffoli comes across a bit too brash in the beginning, he develops into a sympathetic character later in the play. The scene in the sheriff's office, when the Curry men try to get File to come to the house for dinner with Lizzie, is perfectly paced.

Joan Brancale's set and Craig Sonnenberg's costumes help "The Rainmaker" look and feel comfortable. The play is a charming one, and the production at the Nickerson Theatre should please South Shore audiences.

"The Rainmaker" runs through June 14. The summer season will begin July 18 with the musical "Tintypes," and will continue through Aug. 30.

The Nickerson Theatre is located on Accord Park Drive in Norwell.

Well-done bit of acting in 'The Rainmaker'

By Judy Gilman
Special to the Mariner

Every once in awhile there's a show going on that you shouldn't miss. The Nickerson Theatre's presentation of "The Rainmaker" is definitely one of these.

Old-timers among us will remember the film of the same name with Katherine Hepburn superb as the young Lizzie Curry. The whole cast that's been put together at the Norwell complex is, in a word, super.

I realize that this play may seem very humorous to Northern audiences because of the Southerness of the characters, but it's a well-done bit of humorous acting.

There's not a fault to be found anywhere. Lighting knowing lines, costumes, the set, accompanying music—everything is perfect.

I hope the theatre is crowded during "The Rainmaker" run. The Nickerson derserves nothing less, believe me. The show starts at 8:30 p.m. and lasts about two hours.

For more information, call the theatre at 871-2400. And don't miss it.

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

Where have all the Costa Rican flowers gone?

Frequent readers of this column may remember Foster Phillips, who was instrumental in making his church, the First Parish in Brewster, the first and only Sanctuary church for Central American refugees in our area.

He has recently returned from three months in Nicaragua and Costa Rica. I traveled to his home in Dennis on May 1 to get the best international news possible: an eyewitness account from a friend.

Mr. Phillips was born in Mexico to parents who were missionaries. After attending Yale (in the same class as George Bush) he eventually sold business machines in countries throughout Latin America. His experience led him to the position of translator for a U.S. Congressional junket to the region.

He became very upset at our country's policies in the region, as he saw their effects upon the people that had been his business associates and friends. His recent trip was to gather information for himself, and determine how he could contribute to peace and justice for all concerned.

If someone from the South Shore has recently traveled in this part of the world and has a different perspective from Mr. Phillips, get in touch with me. Perhaps we could also prepare a column together.

Following our discussion Foster gave me two manuscripts discribing his visit. What this column describes is limited to his time in Costa Rica. Few of us realize how U.S. foreign policy toward the Nicaraguan government, which the current administration opposes, effects Costa Rica, which it supports.

Foster Phillips flew into the airport at San Juan, Costa Rica on Jan. 21. When he would come on business in years past he would immediately be struck by the wonderful smells from the acres of flowers growing nearby.

Now there were no flowers, only the smell of diesel oil and metal. "Where have all the flowers gone?" he thought.

It is an appropriate symbol for the changes in Costa Rica. A long-time democracy, the country once had police armed only with whistles. Now there are guardsmen dressed and armed as soldiers, trained in Panama by the U.S.

In a nation which abolished its army in 1948, a movement called Costa Rica Libre now recruits young men and trains them to use arms. Part political party, part army and part religion, it is an avowed anti-communist organization, though to date its most public act was to throw rocks at peace marchers.

Phillips heard the Libre founder and general, Bernal Urbino Pinto speak. "We must fight in order to preserve peace. Weapons are good when they defend peace and justice. If weapons were bad the U.S. would not exist."

Whatever their goals, their effects on the Costa Rican atmosphere contributes to the new air of militarism.

U.S. pressures add to the tension. A badly needed $40 million dollar loan was being withheld to see how Costa Rica voted on the Contadora Peace Process. Newly elected President Arias has openly supported neutrality, but will have difficulty maintaining it. The pressure to allow contras to attack Nicaragua from Costa Rica, as they do from Honduras, is increasing.

No better symbol of the pressure exists than The Road. It seems Costa Rica asked the U.S. for a development road to get produce to market. The U.S. sent 1,500 Army engineers and built a road coast-to-coast, very close to the Nicaraguan border. It is an all-weather, heavy duty road of well-packed gravel, 100 feet wide.

It is hard not to notice that tanks could use the road as well as pickup trucks.

These sorts of events, coupled with the highest international debt per capita in the world, has polarized this once placid nation.

Father Miguel Alfaro said, "We have 95,000 families without land. One-half of one percent of the people own 60 percent of the cultivated land." Many of the international corporations pay no taxes, leaving little profit behind. Years ago foreign economic advisors suggested Costa Rica go into cattle, rice and sugar, which require much land but relatively few workers. In order to compete in exports, they have lowered wages to the level of Haiti.

Arturo Piedra, spokesman for the Forum of Evangelical Churches of Costa Rica said, "The majority of our churches are suffering a polarization because of the political situation. Religion goes hand in hand with justice; what unites us is working with the poor. There are black lists in Costa Rica and you can't get a job if you're placed on them. It is impossible, though, to avoid politics ...it's a political statement to say there's no relation between politics and religion."

As Foster Phillips prepared to leave Costa Rica and enter Nicaragua he saw The Road for himself and visited Cosme Jejia, a retired businessman and active religious leader. He said that contras are being trained and equipped on a nearby ranch. They use heavy weapons and planes are landing and taking off constantly. There are an uncommon number of young rowdies in town. "One has to lock the doors these days," he said.

Past Santa Rosa is the Voice of America station, 60,000 watts, located in Costa Rica, but with the signal pointed to Nicaragua. "I don't know what programs are aired," the manager said, "I just receive them and play them."

There is a sense of despair at the edge of Foster Phillips' emotions these days. He feels, however, that he can contribute by traveling back and forth, using his experience to help people in each country better understand its neighbors.

The despair comes from the difficulty he had making U.S. citizens aware of what military solutions do to countries who suffer them.

As he described passing from Costa Rica to Nicaragua he told me, "Land mines were placed indiscriminately by the contras, and there were frequent ambushes. What a rotten way to make war on the innocent! I saw a three-toed sloth hanging from a tree in the coffee fields. His upside-down view of the world impressed me, as the view some of us have had of Nicaragua without ever bothering to come down and see.

"Also, we tend to change our opinions as slowly as the sloth moves. Why do they call a sloth a sloth, for his slowness or for his upside-down view, or both?"

(Darrell Berger is minister of the First Parish Unitarian Church of Scituate.)

YOUR YARD'S BEST FRIEND

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Gerry D'Amico - He got his own and then some

In promising you a write-up this week of my recent meeting with Transportation Secretary Frederick Salvucci, I was naturally assuming that last weekend's Democratic convention would turn out to be, as my students often used to chant as I entered the classroom: "borrrring!" Alas, what we all expected to be the recoronation of our presiding Duke and little more, produced a genuine upset by one Gerry D'Amico of Worcester over the favored Evelyn Murphy (I don't know where she lives) for the office of Lieutenant Duke.

Now, I think I may have just stumbled on the answer; for if I know that Gerry D'Amico comes from Worcester yet Evelyn Murphy's hometown remains a mystery to me after over a decade of her public life, it may reveal that D'Amico has projected his identity whereas Murphy has not. My small ignorance about Murphy (not to be confused with my great ignorance about other matters) is, I submit, a strong indication that D'Amico has identified himself . . . and establishing identity is the first step forward in the first rule of politics: "first, get your own!"

So in taking a stab at understanding the making of Saturday's dramatic upset (one which there is no reason at this writing to believe was ordered by the governor, but rather seems to have been a genuine movement on the convention floor) I would say that first, D'Amico got his own. He did well in Worcester County, he did well among Italians, he had the support of organized labor (including teachers and state unions), and above all he had the support of fellow legislators in a position to influence their own delegations.

Among legislators D'Amico's single most important supporter was Senate President William Bulger. D'Amico acknowledged as much when the fight was over and he had won and it was time to speak to the convention that had just made his day and possibly his career. First he thanked his father and mother who had made such a mess of Evelyn Murphy's day (and possibly her career) by bringing him into the world. Next he thanked Bulger, upon which Murphy supporters loudly booed along with not a few D'Amico ones who until that moment hadn't suspected D'Amico's debt to Bulger. Only after he had thanked his parents and Bulger did D'Amico go on to thank his 2,600-odd other friends.

By contrast with D'Amico, Murphy could not, as was deridingly said of Geraldine Ferraro before her, "deliver her sisters." I ought to have realized what was truly up when during the counting of the ballots I sat down for a moment with a fervid feminist friend (yes, there are a few feminists who will still sit with me). She reported voting for Murphy "after the most agonizing, soul-searching thought process." Now, surely if I were the observant reporter I pass myself off to be I would have known the outcome then and there, for surely there was nary in Italian-American labor delegate from Worcester County at this convention who demeaned his vote for D'Amico with an agonizing "thought process."

But D'Amico did much more than get his own, he took away support from Murphy. The reason, secondly, that he won the endorsement of this convention is that in the months leading up to it he moved left on the issues he emphasized. D'Amico seems to have fully understood that this would be a very liberal convention, and he repeatedly "stroked" the liberals with his rhetoric . . . and no one in politics responds better to stroking than liberals. Like Francis Bellotti and former Sen. Sam Rotondi before him, D'Amico seems to have realized that an able Italian-American Catholic with strong labor support will go nowhere in this state's Democratic politics without liberal acquiescence.

Murphy, on the other hand, has given the appearance of "moving right" in recent years. As Secretary of Economic Affairs in the second Dukakis Administration, she was charged with eradicating Dukakis' anti-business image. In this she was resoundingly successful, but in being so she took positions on matters such as the "right-to-know"(about hazardous substances in the workplace) law, and the plant-closing law, that annoyed progressives. D'Amico's advantage on issues, therefore, was the classic advantage that the freewheeling challenger always has over the responsibility-bound office-holder, an advantage that dates in our politics from 1804 when Thomas Jefferson successfully challenged John Adams for the presidency. (Once elected, Jefferson started another tradition - - - he moved right.)

But D'Amico did more than merely move left. ("Emphasize left" would perhaps be fairer since D'Amico's liberal record is a good one.) D'Amico sold himself as a person as Murphy did not. The third reason he won, I believe, is that he came across as a warm, caring, likeable human being. Murphy, by contrast, came across as cold, aloof, and bureaucratic, as did many of her subordinates. Legislators who had often been annoyed by these subordinates during her tenure in state government began contemplating four years of dealing with the same subordinates in the office of lieutenant governor, and they didn't like what they contemplated.

The contrast between the two candidates public personae came to a head at the perfect moment for D'Amico: the candidates' respective presentations to the assembled delegates. Murphy offerd up an expensive, prepackaged, slick film, a low-order sound and light show in which the sound kept failing. This weak and plastic "son et lumiere" was followed by a weak and plastic speech by the candidate herself.

D'Amico by contrast gave an impassioned address in full frontal humanity. It carried the day. D'Amico's fine speech, I believe, confirmed and consolidated the predilection that had been gradually a-building in the minds of delegates' one-by-one in the course of the campaign.

There is a fourth reason that D'Amico won that must not be overlooked: the timely interference of the press. The day before the convention Peter Lucas of the Herald announced that back in 1978 upon Gov. Dukakis' famous defeat by Edward J. King, Murphy had turned to Dukakis' one-time conqueror and lifelong obsession and sought to stay in her beloved office under the despised King.

So what if she did? But coming on the eve of Dukakis recoronation the story embarrassed Murphy, as it was intended to, the more so when she issued mealy-mouthed denials. The question must now be asked of D'Amico: by what arrangement did he garner Mr. Lucas' favor? Lucas writes a charming, pithy column when he is objective about a matter, but he has a history of punishing the enemies of his friends (Frank Bellotti being the most notable and constant but not the only "friend") unmercifully. The fact that Lucas saw fit to publish a story dating to 1978 on the day before this convention was to vote only proves that the story was neither reporting nor commentary but rather punishment—an attempt to "get" Murphy.

As journalism it was a disgrace, there is no other adjective in journalism that describes it. The political question we must wonder about concerns the compromises a man like D'Amico must make to obtain such a cowardly, last-minute, unanswerable journalistic hatchet job on an opponent. What does this mean with reference to D'Amico's manifest liberalism? Is he truly a liberal or is he really a member of the old hack political network that, much like the rodent population, is decimated from time to time but never quite gets eradicated?

As if Lucas' column weren't enough "luck" for D'Amico, on Saturday morning, the day of the voting, Robert Jordan of the Globe issued a column that thoroughly trashed Murphy from the liberal (i.e. delegate) perspective. The time of this piece was less responsible by 24 hours than that of Lucas. Jordan raised issues (more than can be said of Lucas) that he knew about and might have raised a week or a month or six months before the convention. His intent to injure Murphy, like Lucas' the day before, is proven by his timing. His disgrace is mitigated only by his relative youth and relative lack of habitualness in doing hatchet jobs.

Both Lucas' and Jordan's columns changed minds, and together they changed many minds. Together with the other factors I have mentioned they caused a stunning upset at this convention. It was not an upset with which I necessarily agree, for Evelyn Murphy impresses me as deeply able and intelligent, and D'Amico, whom I have never spoken with, arouses my deep mistrust due to the Lucas piece.

Nevertheless his victory was heartening in that it showed that the Democratic convention remains open to an underfinanced, overweight, non-Boston-area newcomer. It was heartening in that it showed that the Dukakis flock can, as the governor himself frequently asserts, fly in an ungoverned direction. It was heartening, lastly, because too often the Dukakis era is, as my tenure in the classroom was said to be, "borrrring."

Not so this Saturday in Springfield.

MUSINGS — by John H. Cutler

☐ We asked Timothy if his wife was entertaining this summer. "Not very," he said.

☐ I would rather be asked why my name wasn't in "Who's Who" than why it was.

☐ In his book, If Elected I Promise. . . ., Senator John Parker writes about some of the hilarious comments he has heard in the General Court. Samples:

"Mr. Speaker, this bill is a phony with a capital F."

"These are not my figures I'm quoting to my colleagues in this august body. Oh, no, they're the figures of someone who knows what he's talking about."

☐ The biggest fresh water fish ever recorded as having been caught with a rod and reel was a 468-pound sturgeon caught in California in 1983.

Vets and villagers honor Cohasset's war dead

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

They gathered in Monday's early morning chill, under gray skies at the George Mealy American Legion Post on Summer St.

Clad in old uniforms, some that tugged in spots, Cohasset's veterans prepared for the annual march to honor their fallen compatriots.

At 8 a.m. they hiked through still quiet streets to Paul Pratt Memorial Library. There, they boarded buses to North Cohasset Cemetery.

An honor guard led the cavalcade of old soldiers and sailors up the wooded trail to the burial grounds. Prayers were read and a moment of silence was observed. It ended with the loud crack of a gun salute, which echoed off the hills. And the brassy notes of two trumpeters' taps brought the service to a close.

The veterans held similar ceremonies at Woodside and Beechwood cemeteries.

At Sohier Street, they were joined by the Deer Hill School Band, Cohasset Scouts, and the Kevin Barry Irish-American Pipe and Drum Corps.

As the sound of bagpipes and the thunder of drums heralded the procession's approach, townspeople began to line along North Main Street and they clogged the common.

But first, the Legionnaires made one more stop. At Central Cemetery, they laid a wreath at the grave of George Mealy, the World War 1 veteran for whom American Legion Post 118 is named.

Then, as the assembly paraded into town with flags waving and bands blaring, the sun broke through the clouds and the audience cheered.

All gathered on the green beneath St. Stephen's Church for a brief service. The tribute was sealed with the wail of bagpipes in "Amazing Grace."

The throng then trailed the procession through town, where the buildings were draped with flags. They marched to the beat of the Deer Hill drums down Elm Street to Veterans Memorial Park across from the legion hall.

"It's certainly difficult for those of us who do this year after year to keep reminding ourselves of what we're about," said guest speaker Maurice Foley, a member of the American Legion. "It sometimes seems so vague, so impersonal, so far away, so unreal to an increasing number of us. And perhaps we should thank God for that.

"On the other hand," he added, "as one stands here and looks at the flags rippling proudly in the ocean breeze, it is not so difficult.

"It always brings us back," said the history professor from Massasoit College, "back to Gettysburg. I guess that was where it all truly began. Just think, within two days, 55,000 American boys died. Of course 20,000 of them were under the flag flying the stars and bars.

"It's interesting," he said, "and I think significant also, that it was that battle, it was that occasion, it was that war between the states, that our Kentucky-born president, Abraham Lincoln chose

From barn raising to barn razing

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

The red thermometer standing atop the lawn of the community center has gathered more moss than money lately.

An indicator of the center's fundraising activities, it has remained stationary for many months.

But that won't be the case for long, according to center president Glenn Pratt. A revived fundraising effort will begin shortly, with new plans developed to enlarge the current facility.

Last July, the center's board of directors announced plans to renovate the barn in the rear of the South Main Street - Ripley Road property. The barn was scheduled for complete reconstruction, with two levels available for gymnastics, ballet, aerobic and karate classes.

The necessary town permits were applied for and approved, and funds for the 'barnraising' were steadily streaming in.

But as the architectural plans were finalized, it became obvious, Pratt said, the barn would not provide enough room for the expanding programs and membership at the center.

The current plans, which will be finalized at the directors' June 5 meeting, will include a two-story addition to the rear of the building. The barn will be demolished, Pratt added.

"We have $50,000 raised now," Pratt said. "But we've changed the focus. Instead of renovating the barn, we'll build an addition. We'll probably need about $175,000. Our original goal for the barn was $125,000."

Pratt said memberships to the community center swelled from 300 in 1985 to 600 in 1986. "We figure we'll reach 1,000 memberships by next year," he added. "There's really been renewed interest in the center in the last 18 months. With the Senior Center there now, we've picked up an additional level of

Committee to meet with petitioners

The school committee was scheduled to discuss Wednesday a petition signed by hundreds of residents asking Gino DiGirolamo be reinstated as high school principal.

Committee members decided Tuesday they would meet with former committee member Doris Golden to discuss the petition she began last week. Following the 6 p.m. meeting with Golden, the committee was scheduled to interview the top three candidates for the position of high school principal.

DiGirolamo, who has been with the Cohasset school system for 28 years, applied for the position but was not selected as a finalist. He is currently assistant principal at the school.

Mr. Di said this week he had heard about the petition, but would not comment on it. Golden explained Mr. Di had no involvement in the drive to reconsider the appointment.

Golden said the petition was prompted following the selection of finalists announced at last week's school committee meeting. "I saw the way the superintendent and assistant superintendent were appointed. I have nothing against the two men. But I was opposed to the way they were appointed. That's the most important decision a school committee can make.

"Now with the principal, I don't care what degrees these other people might have. They can't hold a candle to Mr. Di," she said.

Golden said her acquaintance with Mr. Di began when her daughters were at the high school. "He is a disciplinarian," Golden stated. "He is a teacher, advisor, and coach. He's loved by everyone. I feel so strong, in my heart, and knowing Mr. Di, it was something I felt I had to do."

Golden said she started with 25 copies of the petition, which were circulated to local stores and coffee shops. Someone made 25 additional copies and more copies were made from the original, she eplained.

"At this time, I have no idea how many signatures we have," she said. "But I know that no one I approached refused to sign. They were all very enthusiastic about it."

The petition, which was submitted to the individual school committee members, requests the committee reconsider the appointment of Mr. Di as principal. Noting his 28 years of educational service to Cohasset, the petition outlines his diversified background has earned him the right to be principal. "He has devoted so much more of himself above and beyond

Cohasset, Hingham still in running for 'Witches of Eastwick'

The media blitz is on as observers place bets whether Hollywood will be coming to the South Shore.

Camera crews from Providence, R.I. were scouting for interviews with locals this week in Cohasset. Boston television stations were hounding town officials for comments. Everyone wants to know if the "Witches of Eastwick" will be haunting Cohasset and Hingham.

"I really don't know yet," an exasperated executive secretary Donald Andrew said this week. Following a call from a Warner Brothers location manager Tuesday night, Andrew could state definitely, "we still don't know."

"All I know at this point is that Cohasset and Hingham are still in the running. There's a definite possibility the movie will be filmed here. But according to Warner Brothers, they won't make a final decision for another week to ten days."

This week, Andrew was interviewed extensively by Rhode Island newspapers and television stations who have been following the story.

Little Compton, R.I., the actual setting of the John Updike novel, has reacted negatively to the possibility of filming in that tiny seashore community. "I guess people have threatened all sorts of things," Andrew said, "including holding hands around the church which was to be used in the filming, and singing hymns."

Cohasset and Hingham, on the other hand, have

Golden's concerns with Pilgrim

In a hand-delivered letter to the president of Boston Edison Company, Sen. William Golden outlined his concerns with a recent negative report issued on the Pilgrim Nuclear Power Plant in Plymouth. He requested company officials address the concerns before a panel of South Shore legislators.

In his letter to Edison officials, Sen. Golden emphasized his concern the Plymouth plant is considered to be one of the worst managed nuclear generating facilities in the country. That assessment was made recently by the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Committee.

"I believe the time has come to openly and candidly question the ability of the Boston Edison Company to safely operate the Pilgrim facility," he wrote, May 23.

In his letter, Sen. Golden said the residents of the state should be provided full information and costs of the energy facility "and be given the opportunity to review and question the industry officials who are responsible for the technology and management of these facilities," he added.

He specified the issues to be discussed at the legislative panel, including: the safety record of the Pilgrim facility; current plans to improve the operation and management of the Pilgrim facility; and alternatives to the continued operation of the plant by Edison Co.

Mooring list reminder. . .

Harbormaster Harry Ritter has warned all boaters on the waiting list for harbor moorings to reaffirm their position by June 1. If boaters fail to reaffirm their position with the harbormaster, there is a risk they will lose that position on the list, Ritter said.

Officials voice impact concern about Indian Wind plan

Scituate and Cohasset residents attended a public hearing held by the planning board Tuesday on a proposed division on Summer Street.

Plans for the Summer Street subdivision were first approved in 1973, when it was called the Four Seasons subdivision.

Robert Marzelli, lawyer for the developer Walter Winchester, requested to modify the plan and rename it the Indian Wind subdivision.

Proposed modifications include decreasing the number of lots from 34 to 29 and changing the lay out of the streets. Marzelli also requested a waiver to increase the length of a dead-end street from 600 feet to 850 feet, 250 feet beyond the length allowed by the town.

Christine Bassett, chairman of the Cohasset planning board, said the plans "did not show the effect of drainage onto abutting property in the town of Cohasset."

According to Camp, Dresser and McKee, consulting engineers for the town, "There is a need to study the impact of the drainage system on downstream properties."

According to the plan, drainage from the subdivision would discharge into wetlands in Scituate and go into a tributary that flows north into Cohasset.

Constantine Constantinides said, "We need to understand the impact of the subdivision on both towns."

Michele Dorsey said, "A neighboring town has exhibited concern. More and more people are becoming concerned about a regional plan in terms of water."

Although the planning board was to have decided on the modifications by June 2, the developer granted the planning board's request to extend the deadline to July 2.

"We're still trying to clarify some of the issues relating to wetlands," said Constantinides.

The planning board will continue the public hearing on June 17, and plans involve the Scituate and Cohasset conservation commissions and the Cohasset planning board. The board must file its decision two weeks and one day after the public hearing.

Lilacs along South Main Street have reached full bloom and will soon fade from view as warmer weather arrives in Cohasset. (Eric Francis photo)

Used car licenses exceeded

Former Building Inspector Edward Poskus informed Town Counsel Richard Henderson there are several used car businesses exceeding the limits of their licenses.

The names of Ken's Foreign Auto Body on King Street; Magee's of Beechwood Street; Gonsalves of Beechwood Street; and Williams on Chief Justice Cushing Highway, have been forwarded to town counsel for legal action. Licenses issued to the businesses from the town specify a certain number of cars that may legally be on the premises. During inspection of these businesses, Poskus found the cars on the lots exceeded the license issued from the town.

REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES

By Norma Telesco
Home Center Realty

THE MULTIPLE LISTING SERVICE

Over the past ten years, the Multiple Listing Services around the country have revolutionized the way real estate is sold. When an agent lists your home for sale, he takes all of the pertinent information about the property and places it in a computerized inventory bank.

Once a home is placed on MLS, agents all over town have immediate access to information about price, location, the number of bedrooms and baths, the kitchen equipment and other appliances that convey with the home, the size of the yard, the type of heating and air conditioning systems, the garage, and a host of other features. The system allows agents to feed in their buyers' basic needs and match them up to the listings of all area Realtors. When you list your home, you, in effect, employ not only the listing agent to market your home, but hundreds of his colleagues all over town. They can then work cooperatively to get your property sold as quickly as possible.

By placing your home on the Multiple Listing Service, you have the most effective advertising there is, because it reaches the people who are so influential in getting homes sold — the Realtors working with qualified buyers!

If there's a move in your future, call the professionals at Home Center Realty. Our number is 749-8833, or just drop by our offices at 57 Water St., Hingham. We're happy to serve all your real estate needs.

First Parish Meeting House, a familiar site in Cohasset

By David H. Wadsworth,
Cohasset Historical Society
Special to the Mariner

The recent extensive restoration project carried out at the town's First Parish Meeting House on the Common reminds us the classic old New England church is one of Cohasset's most historic buildings, and once was the seat of the town's government as well as its center for religious worship.

Built in the year 1747, the Meetinghouse served originally as the community's Precinct meeting place and as the church building of Hingham's Second Parish. At that time the area called Cohasset was part of its parent town of Hingham, and would remain as Hingham's Second (or East) Precinct and Parish until the separation of the two towns in 1770.

Earliest settlement of the Cohasset uplands occurred in the latter 1600s, following the dividing up of the land among Hingham landowners in 1670. Before that, Hingham farmers had come to the shores of Cohasset to harvest salt hay and to pasture their domestic animals.

By the year 1700 Cohasset was a thriving agricultural and fishing village, with numerous farms and homesteads dotting the landscape. At that time the new settlement still was an integral part of Hingham; its meetinghouse for government business and for worship, as well as its school, were several difficult miles to the west in the parent town.

Early residents of Cohasset found the trip overland to Hingham to be arduous. In about 1714, Cohasseters received permission to construct a meetinghouse of their own. The site chosen was located upon the town's undivided common land, near the growing center of population. That original meetinghouse was located a few yards south of the present church on the common.

Within a few years the new village at Cohasset became the Second Precinct and Parish of Hingham, with the right to have its own church, its own school, and to raise, through limited self-government, the taxes needed to support its minister and school teacher. By the decade of the 1740s, Cohasset's increasing population had outgrown that first small meetinghouse on the common, and a new and larger building was called for.

Cohasset's earliest book of records reports that at a meeting held on June 30, 1746, the Precinct voted to choose a Committee of three to draw a plan for a new meetinghouse, and to "consult concerning what materials are necessary." The three persons on that committee were Cohasseters Joshua Bates, James Stutson and John Stephenson. They presented their plan to the Precinct at a meeting held on September 22, 1746, and a vote of acceptance was given.

At that time the functions of the Precinct government and the Parish Church closely coincided, and at a meeting held on May 25, 1747, the Parish also voted to approve the new plan for a meetinghouse. During the spring of 1747, funding was voted and construction began. The building was substantially completed by October of that year. At a Parish meeting March 14, 1747/1748, the sum of 500 pounds was raised for the care of the building for that year. Since part of the cost of construction was to be raised by selling individual pews to Precinct residents who were members of the Parish, "ground" or floor space was parceled out for an appropriate fee.

In 1749 the old meetinghouse just to the south was taken down and its timbers used in the construction of other buildings. Parish members voted not to move the original pulpit into the new church, but to build a new one to take its place. Interior plastering of the new meetinghouse was authorized by a vote taken on March 11, 1749/1750. Following completion of the work, it was voted to remove all scaffolding from the building. Total cost of construction was "computed and allowed" at a Parish meeting held March 31, 1755. The cost had been 3,975 pounds, 14 shillings and three pence, in the old tenor.

A bell tower was added to the building by Precinct vote taken March 17, 1761. That tower was not the present steeple, and was removed at a later date. The Precinct then voted to add a porch to the building in March of 1768. In the year 1770, an Act of the Colonial General Court in Boston established Cohasset as a "District" or Town separate from Hingham. Thus the Precinct meetinghouse became the Town meetinghouse, and the Second Parish of Hingham became the First Parish of Cohasset.

As the new town mobilized for the Revolutionary War, townspeople voted to build in their meetinghouse a closet for the storage of the town's ammunition. Thus the church became a magazine prepared to serve in the defense of the community. Occupying the pulpit at that time was the firebrand Revolutionist Reverend John Brown, whose patriotic sermons aroused townspeople in the cause of liberty, and is believed to have met in Cohasset with Patriot leader John Hancock.

After the successful ending of the Revolutionary War, the town voted on September 22, 1788 to authorize construction of a new porch and steeple "to be completed as soon as can be conveniently done." That steeple is the present one. Subsequent to its completion, the old bell tower was removed. Throughout those years, interior changes continued to be made as additional "ground" or pew space continued to be sold by the town's Selectmen.

In the year 1825, however, the separation of church and government occurred in Cohasset with the building of a second church directly across the street. Town funding for the meetinghouse and for the salary of its minister ceased. The old Colonial church passed to the hands of its parishoners and out of the public domain. However, a town clock later was placed in the belfry of the meetinghouse by vote of townspeople. Funded by private subscription and given to the town, the existing and historic Howard "tower clock" was accepted by voters at a meeting held March 6, 1865.

Today, Cohasset's Colonial meetinghouse is a direct connection with the early history of our town and its people, and stands virtually unchanged on the common, a living example of old New England's faith in its government and its religion.

Area artisan makes an original mark in Boston

Thanks to the vision of a team of developers, contractors and architects, one area artisan is making a very original mark on Symphony Road in Back Bay.

The artist is Syma, a Hingham-based craftsperson who has designed and molded 16 original brick clay pediments or windowheads that are this week being installed on the now-under-construction Symphony II Townhouses.

According to general contractors for the project, LBC, Inc. of Norwell, Symphony II's developer, Phillip Mayfield of OKM Associates, Inc., wanted original windowheads for the row of townhouses reminiscent of the motifs that grace many older buildings in the city. Project architect, Vcevy Strekalovsky, Strekalovsky & Hoyt of Hingham, who knew of Syma's work in clay, approached her at her studio in the South Shore Arts Center in Cohasset and commissioned her to design the pediments.

Artist Syma says, "This is definitely the most exciting thing I've ever done, and I've been playing with clay since I was four." She says the project took a year to complete from her initial research of other city windowheads to final firing. Deer Hill School, Cohasset, where Syma was formerly artist in residence, provided space for initial work on models and molds. But contractors LBC provided space in their warehouse for major preparation of the clay for a six-day-long firing process.

Lambert says the Symphony II project is all new construction on a vacant lot on Symphony Road, an area now seeing remarkable comeback from days of demolition and arson. Meeting the needs of private income and rental units, the townhome row features four stacks with basement and first floor units as rentals, with the three floors above to be offered as condominiums. In a plan meeting city guidelines, each Symphony II condominium owner will also purchase two rental units.

Hingham-based artist Syma puts the final touches on one of 16 windowheads she designed for Boston townhouses.

Installation of the Symphony II pediments is scheduled to be finished by the end of April. The total project is slated for completion June 1.

Poster winners

Two Deer Hill students were winners of top prizes in the South Shore Bank's 150th anniversary poster contest.

The idea of the contest was to draw a picture of life either 150 years ago or 150 years into the future.

Fifth and sixth graders at Deer Hill worked on the project on their own time, under the guidance of art teacher, Jean O'Malley. Bank customers were the judges.

Peter Fahey was the winner of a $25 bond; Rebecca Tosca won a telescope. Their posters have been sealed in a time capsule which will be opened in 50 years. Won't it be fun, Peter and Rebecca, for your children to see your award-winning drawings!

Some true sayings

The following include truisms from Jean Higgins, CHS secretary:

"If you cannot find happiness along the way, you will not find it at the end of the road;" "To share with a friend is to see twice the beauty;" "You can't do anything about the length of your life but you can do something about the width and the depth," and "To err is human — to blame it on someone else is even more human."

Notes on a field trip

Thanks to the spirits who developed a "force field" which in reality got us through this past weekend's backpacking trip to the White Mountains!

We were marveling at the beauty of this seeming gift from Nature to man such a relatively short distance from built-up area, but we also had numerous opportunities to fall — a broken fan belt and burst water hose near Mt. Washington on the drive up in the rain; threading our way over slippery, newly-skinned logging slash in a scramble to find the trail with minutes of daylight left on Friday night; thrashing our way through several bushwacks trying to find the trail obliterated by logging operations Saturday morning; a heart-, lung- and leg-straining climb up to the height of Shelburne Pass Saturday afternoon; ankle- and knee-testing rocks on the descent Sunday morning; a final precarious rivercrossing Sunday afternoon, and of course the clogged highway traffic on the drive home Sunday evening.

Despite the annoying black flies, the crew were super sports, super cheery, super cooperative, super appreciative — and we returned home safely — safely and fortified with images of all shades of green, trying to sleep in the presence of a very methodicially-hooting barred owl, the largest (and for some the first) and freshest moose tracks we'd ever seen, suddenly-emerging waterfalls bursting from rocks and cascading into pools leading onto successive fall and pools below; the feeling of putting weary feet in pure, ice-cold water; the proliferation of delicate spring flowers everywhere, even shooting up in the middle of the trail in this remote area near the Maine border where we never saw another person except our crew from the time we left one car Friday p.m. to the time approximately 10 miles later when we approached the other car Sunday afternoon; snow on the mountain tops, Sally Hurtig's teaching Carine Mortiaux "It's raining, it's pouring/the old man is snoring. . ." and Carine whistling in French; Lauri Doherty, who made the trip in sneakers while imitating bird songs, Dan Kierce's American flag, powerful fluorescent lantern and off-road legs; gadgeteer Ed Grafton, super mechanic and answer man; Tony Bernius, exclamation-crafter and physiology specialist; Colleen Lucas, wood sprite and chief appreciator, Dad MacDonald, black fly collector and adversity dispenser. . . .

A conversation with Cohasset's 'Mr. History'

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

"Somebody told me last week that I have become a fixture in Cohasset," David Wadsworth said with a laugh Tuesday.

A lifelong local resident, Wadsworth has been like a busy gardener digging up the deep roots of this old coastal village.

As Senior Curator for the Cohasset Historical Society, this gardener found that those roots are well intertwined with the roots of his own family tree.

"I was born in Cohasset," he said. "My mother was a descendant, on both sides of her family, of the first Hingham and Cohasset settlers.

"My father," he added, "was from out of town; he was old Duxbury, but he moved to Cohasset when he married."

Wadsworth said his family's deep roots in the town's soil, planted in him the desire to discover, define and document the history of Cohasset.

"My mother was a member of the historical society," he said, "and she was very interested in family genealogy, so I grew up in an atmosphere where there was a lot of local history being talked about.

"I suppose I picked up quite a lot of it," he added, "but I really didn't pick up a great deal of interest in it until about seven years ago, when I was appointed to work at the Town Hall for a year-and-a-half on a CETA grant to organize the Town historic records."

Wadsworth explained that in the old public records of Cohasset, he found a familiar name.

"Frankly," he said, "I saw my great grandfather's signature on book after book after book. He was Town treasurer and selectman and so forth, and I became fascinated with the subject (of local history) while I was working there.

"At the time that job was coming to an end," he added, "this position here as senior curator of the society became open and I accepted it."

Wadsworth explained, when he first took the job five years ago, he set out to reorganize the collection of the Maritime Museum.

"One of the first things I did," he said, "was to set up the displays at the Maritime Museum in what I hoped would be a more organized way, so when people come in they won't see just a lot of things scattered around.

"Hopefully," he added, "they will see things that relate as a group to the history of Cohasset."

But his biggest undertaking, has been the task of organizing a new filing system for putting the plethora puzzle pieces to Cohasset's history together. The job is ongoing.

"I have been working with Burtam Pratt, of the Historic Trust, to develop the society's archive files," he said. "It's a major job."

Along with his work for the historical society, Wadsworth has served on Cohasset's Historical Commission, which has been working on another major job.

"It's called 'The Captains Walk,'" he explained. "It's a walk around the perimeter of Cohasset Harbor, and we hope there will be signs up there in the next few weeks, if we are able to meet our goal."

He added, "The signs will point out historical places or buildings down around the edge of the harbor, because the harbor was a fishing, business and mercantile center a century ago.

David Wadsworth

"The commission has been working for the last four or five years developing this project," he said.

"My main function for the commission over the past several years," he added, "has been as a researcher and writer for the survey of historical assets of the Town of Cohasset, which is a comprehensive survey of the old houses, buildings and areas of historic importance in the town."

Wadsworth explained, the survey covers "several hundred old houses and buildings, as well as a couple of bridges and the cemeteries."

He said his favorite period in history is the early colonial era.

"The time of the Plymouth Colony and the early colonies tends to fascinate me," he said, "but there's no other time than the present in which I would have preferred to live.

"I don't consider myself to be a romantic," he said. "I don't have any illusions about history."

"I suppose this comes from getting my introduction through the public records," he explained, "where there are no such things as fables and folklore; it's all hard fact, figures and statistics."

He added, "I try to maintain what I call an archivist's attitude, that is - objectivity. I don't think it was a great deal of fun to have lived a century ago.

"I think it was a lot of hard work," he said, "and I think people generally tended to have more troubles than most of us have today. You know, with such things as the fact there was no anesthesia for medical purposes and so on, Life was never easy."

Wadsworth explained his philosophy.

"Actually, I'm sort of a technologist. I look to the future rather than to the past. Hopefully, we'll have a better world, if it survives.

"It will be better a century from now," he said, "than it is now. It's better now than it was a century ago."

He added, "Technology determines the type of society that we live in. While I think it's not inevitable that the human race will improve its lot, it is highly desirable."

Wadsworth recalled the changes he has witnessed in Cohasset since his childhood.

"When I was a youngster here," he said, "I think the population was about 3,000 and I believe it was fairly stable."

He explained, "Cohasset was slower to change after World War II, when the population increase began to hit the South Shore. I think Cohasset progressed comparatively slowly, because we were a little bit more isolated than some towns.

"So you didn't see the population go up," he said, "with the developments that took place in the 1950s in the larger towns around here.

"But there have been many changes."

Wadsworth explained, "The whole ambiance of the town has changed, because it's a very different kind of people.

"When I was young," he recalled, "I think it was still populated substantially by old families, the old residents of the town, many of whom are gone.

"The names have all but disappeared now."

He added, "I guess you tended to see the same faces every day on the street at the center and you tended to know most of the people.

"You may have been related to many of them," he said with a laugh. "And that is perhaps the biggest single change."

"It's a much prettier town now," Wadsworth conceded, "because I don't think there was as much of an emphasis on attractiveness, preservation and appearance.

"It was still a working town," he recalled, "where there were farms. I remember waking up and being able to hear the roosters crowing up at the dairy farm on Deer Hill."

Those mornings have faded into the memories of Cohasset's old-timers, and into the rows of history Wadsworth sows at the Lothrop House on Summer Street.

"I'd like to see people come and visit our historical society museums," he offered. "Stop by and learn about the history of an old New England seacoast village.

He added, "It's an interest of mine and I think a lot of people, if they stop to think about it and put some thought into it, might find it to be interesting and enlightening as well."

☐ Bob O'Hayre certainly had a memorable weekend recently! He and fellow classmates from Boston College celebrated their Fiftieth Reunion, and there was an excellent turnout for the gala. To top the whole weekend off for Mr. O'Hayre, he was the Grand Marshall at this year's Graduation Ceremony. Now that is a special honor indeed!

☐ With education on the agenda, how about Cari Golden's latest feat! Cari, daughter of Jack and Doris Golden of Bound Brook Lane, applied for and has been accepted to Sigma Gamma Epsilon Chapter by the Eligibility and Membership Committee. As a member of Sigma Theta Tau, she also became a member of the Gamma Epsilon Chapter, the Chapter of Northeastern University's College of Nursing. An induction of new members will be held at the Marriott, Long Wharf. Cari is presently at Beth Israel Hospital in Boston.

☐ We all knew that Helen Pratt had way too much energy to retire from all action, and we were right! She has joined the Cohasset Office of Hunneman and Co., Inc. Realtors as a licensed sales associate, and we want to wish you good luck in your new business venture, Helen.

☐ Hope everybody had a chance to go by the Common on Sunday and see the beautiful sight of the bride and groom and the wedding party having their pictures taken in front of a beautiful horse drawn carriage. The sky was blue, the gals a vision in their yellow gowns, and the bride and groom looked wonderful. It was just like a day out of the history books, with the huge carriage and white horse . . .

☐ Here's hoping that Walter Wheelwright, a patient at South Shore Hospital, is on the mend and back on his feet real soon.

☐ Michael Cisneros, Jennifer Plante and Peter Smith are in the news this week. They all received Johns Hopkins certificates for distinction in the recent talent search held by Johns Hopkins University to find and recognize the most academically talented seventh graders. Michael also received state and regional honors! Congratulations to all of you.

☐ How about our State Representative and her latest selection! Mary Jeanette Murray has been selected by Secretary of the Air Force Russell A. Rourke to participate in the 33rd Annual Air War College National Security Forum at Maxwell Air Force Base in Alabama. Forum members will participate in discussions and programs with the 225 military officers from the grade of Colonel and above who constitute the class. Mary Jeanette should be right at home with all of the officers, she is a former member of the United States Marine Corps.

☐ Speaking of the Marine Corps, Dan Curran is almost through with his basic training, slated to be complete the first week in June. But he'll be glad to get out of that heat, it sure gets hot down there around now. Good luck Dan, whatever your next stop may be . . .

☐ Congratulations to Jim Benbow, who graduated from the University of Rochester recently.

☐ Glad to hear that Professor John Zotos is home, finally! He was in the hospital a total of 372 days for hip transplants. Although he kept very busy with his research and consulting activities with Northeastern University colleagues and several companies, he must be so glad to put Cohasset as his residence once again! So must his wife and two sons. That is a long hospitalization if we've ever heard one! Glad to report that everything is A-OK!!

☐ Lt. j.g. Mike Fichtner, son of Herman and JoAnn Fichtner, is stationed with Light Helicopter Anti-Submarine Squadron 30, based at the Naval Air Station in Norfolk, VA. The 26-yr. Navy pilot is assigned to an 11-member detachment which provides aerial support for the oceanographic ship USNS Harkness. Mike, a 1978 grad of CHS is one of three pilots assigned to the detachment and flies the SH-2F Seasprite helicopter. The versatible Seasprite is used for anti-submarine warfare, surface ship surveillance, transportation, and search and rescue missions. Saw his picture, and if you haven't, ask Mom Jo for a peek at it. Extremely handsome indeed! One suspects that many a gal would love to fly in his helicopter, even if they hate to fly!

☐ Summer's here . . . the Box Office is open at the South Shore Music Circus, so get your tickets for the performance that you want to see . . . it's a safe bet that the motorhome that parked out in front two days before the windows opened already got theirs!

☐ That's the news for this week. Let us hear yours!

Petition misguided

The school committee is expected to name a new high school principal this week. The three finalists were listed at a public meeting held last week.

Three local sentimental favorites, Christine Collins, Gino DiGirolamo and Patricia Wunschel were not among the finalists.

It is particularly sad that Mr. Di, a beloved member of the high school faculty for many years, and former acting high school principal, was not selected by the search committees.

It is unfortunate in the sense that everyone loves Mr. Di. The kids, the teachers, and the community. He is a sensitive, caring, and loving educator.

But the fact is, he was not, in the collective opinion of more than 30 search committee members, the most qualified choice for high school principal.

That is bound to upset many people. And believe us, it upset many members of the search committees.

The easiest decision for everyone would have been to say, Mr. Di is the one, the only choice to make. But unfortunately in the opinion of the committee members, the easiest choice was not the correct choice.

Now a petition is being circulated around town. The search committee's earnest work has been challenged and their decision has been ridiculed.

Why?

Where were these people when the search committees were formed? Why didn't they volunteer to serve? If they believe the entire process was incorrect, that students should not have been allowed to participate on the committees, why didn't they speak out before the decision was made?

Why do people react to a situation rather than confront it in its initial stages? Must everything be a crisis before a reaction is evoked?

We're not saying the principal search committees was the best concept to head down the pike. We thought at the time it might be awkward and unproductive with so many members. But as the process proceeded, everyone seemed pleased with the progress.

Be assured, narrowing the field down to three finalists was the most difficult decision many of these members have ever made. Eliminating Mr. Di was as difficult.

Imagine a student committee member who, in his best judgement, had to eliminate Mr. Di from the final list. Imagine the maturity it took for that youngster to decide someone would make a better principal than Mr. Di, the man he admired throughout his high school career.

That decision was difficult enough. Now, to be ridiculed by this petition! To have their hard-fought decision brought up for public scorn is shameful.

Most people believe the school committee was dead wrong for the manner in which they selected a new superintendent. Maybe they bent too far in the opposite direction when selecting a new principal.

But don't blame the members of the community who volunteered to select that new principal. They took the precious time. They searched their souls in lengthy deliberations and made a choice.

To hold them up to public scorn is misguided.

And Mr. Di, who will hold his head high despite this public rejection, would surely disapprove of such a protest.

Ward Plan offers an economical solution

Letters

To the Editor:

I was the vice chairman of the special sewer study committee, a committee appointed by town boards and comprised of dedicated independent residents such as Chartis Langmaid, chairperson; Murial Silva, Henry Rattenbury, Steve Bartow, Dick Avery, MaryJane McArthur, and Gary Vanderweil. We held regular, posted meetings and investigated every aspect of sewering, including listed septic system failures, leaching field design and effect on groundwater, sewer treatment plants, intermunicipal agreements, land drainage systems, and the quality of water in the harbor and offshore.

We met with lobstermen, the business community, and various groups of residents. Initially, the town publicly requested proposals from engineering firms to provide alternative engineering solutions to the M & E plan. Many notable firms such as Anderson Nichols and Co., Inc. and Lombardo and Associates, offered to investigate and propose alternative solutions to M & E. Ward was selected because of experience and favorable comments from references.

At the recent public meeting I made a statement that I spent many nights studying. This study involved researching all aspects of M & E and Ward. I took nothing at face value, performed my own construction estimates and flow calculations. I reached my own conclusion that the Ward plan offered sound engineering and economically-feasible solutions to the town's sewer needs. The special sewer advisory committee reached the same conclusion.

It is my opinion the M & E plan was a self-serving engineering document. The investigation of septic system failures was incomplete and therefore misleading. M & E barely mentioned that a sewer outfall off our coast would require a public hearing to determine if the quality of our coastal waters should be downgraded from Class I to Class II.

M & E recommended design criteria of a 750,000 gallon per-day plant expandable to 1 million gallons per day, which is far beyond our current need. The state engineers stated that all funding of treatment plants and sewer lines must be based on current need. That means that future growth of the town cannot by law be funded now.

The proposed 300,000 gallon per day Ward plan will accomodate areas of severe septic system problems. Although I agree with the sewer commissioners that Brewster Road and the 3-A business area can be treated with on-site solutions, the conditions are borderline that small diameter effluent sewer lines can economically serve that area. Citizens could demand and vote inclusion of these areas in our sewer district. We still have excess capacity in the Hull connection for 70,000 gallons per day additional growth. Incidentally, 70,000 gallons per day is the capacity of our current plant which now serves most of the downtown area.

Hull has a well-managed new and underutilized sewer treatment plant with a properly-functioning ocean outfall. It only makes sense to use it.

Since Mr. Campbell, in his last Mariner letter questioned my professional credentials, I submit the following resume: (1) B.S. in Mechanical Engineering; (2) Master's in Business Administration; (3) Registered Professional Engineer; (4) Twenty-one years experience in oil, chemical and environmental engineering, with a background in refining, marketing operations, hazardous waste treatment and resource recovery; (5) Private practice as a consulting engineer for the last 14 years.

Now, I have a few questions for Mr. Campbell. (1) Did you attend any of the special sewer study committee meetings? I don't recall you ever raising any questions for consideration. (2) What are your professional credentials and experience? (3) Why are you so emotionally involved in this issue — to the extent that you must personally insult everyone whose opinion differs from your own?

Citizens — I urge you not to spend another $20,000 on further study of this issue; let us get on with the much-needed sewering of this town.

Understating the sewer project cost

To the Editor:

Your report on the Sewer Commission presentation of May 15 by reporter John Magadieu incorrectly quotes me as saying the M&E plan would sewer one-third of the town for only $1.6 million more than for the Ward plan to sewer one-tenth of the town. I know very well that the difference in cost is more than that, and the difference is commensurate with the far greater scope and quality.

What really happened is that I teased the Sewer Commission to explain why they were saying it. A letter by Mr. Guild in the Mariner three weeks ago said that the M&E plan could serve one-third of the town for 4.4 million, which is only $1.6 million more than one of the numbers presented for the Ward plan. The unreliability of the Sewer Commissioner's pronouncements was well demonstrated — they could not explain it despite repeated questioning. Had they had a proper grasp, they would have recognized that Mr. Guild's figure was wrong, and admitted it. The admission would have increased the cost advantage of the Ward plan, which shows how confused they are!

It's almost comical that three or four years ago they were misleading the town by exaggerating the cost of the M&E plan, now they are so muddled they understate its cost without knowing it.

It was Mr. De Santis' delusion that the Ward plan originally would be 94 percent funded, and that the funding has been reduced since to 50 percent. DEQE warned us repeatedly about the funding delusions. All that has changed is that the sewer Commission now realizes the realities. Meanwhile, the town was misled. Let's not blame the delusions on DEQE.

Report from the State House. . .

Drunk driving has become an issue of great concern to the people of Massachusetts in the wake of many automobile fatalities involving innocent people. Legislation providing tougher penalties for drunk drivers has certainly made a significant impact on the consequences of driving drunk but has not kept the habitual offender out from behind the wheel of an automobile.

House Republicans have recently filed a bill that targets repeat offenders - people already convicted of drunk driving who drive a car without a license or registration.

Nothing infuriates me more than when I read in the newspaper that someone was killed by an unlicensed, unregistered, convicted drunk driver who was driving drunk again.

The law currently provides a weak first offense penalty for operating a motor vehicle with a suspended or revoked license for driving while intoxicated.

The legislation Republicans have filed makes this penalty tougher not only for the first offense (which is actually the second offense after the drunk driving conviction), but also includes penalties for subsequent offenses.

Under this legislation, for the first offense the driver would be fined $500, have the license plates repossessed for one year, and be subject to an intensive probation in the form of "house arrest" for a period of not less than one year or not more than two and one half years.

On the second offense, the fine would increase to $1,000 with a mandatory jail sentence of not less than one year or not more than two and one half years. On the third offense, a $2,000 fine would accompany all of the above. Sentences for subsequent offenders could not be served concurrently.

There is also a provision to make any individual liable who knowingly allows a person with a revoked or suspended license to operate his or her motor vehicle.

Judges in the Commonwealth agree we need tough penalties for drunk drivers, but the problem is where do we put them? That is where the "house arrest" plays an important role. "House arrest" is currently being implemented in at least ten states. Through electronic phone calls, random checks by probation officers and neighborhood awareness, the person subject to "house arrest" is kept under watch at all times.

"House arrest" also allows the offender to travel to and from work, thus reducing any dependency on an already overburdened welfare system. It also keeps these offenders, many of whom suffer from alcoholism, out of hardened prisons that could scar them for life. Most importantly, however, it provides an immediate place to put these offenders.

This legislation has the support of Mother's Against Drunk Driving (MADD) and other groups that believe something must be done to keep the drunk driver out from behind the wheel of an automobile.

I also support the governor's initiatives to impose tougher penalties on drunk drivers and to create a new legal offense - that of driving with a blood alcohol level of .10 or higher. This is known as the "per se" provision and has been adopted by more than 40 states.

An authomobile in the hands of a drunk driver is nothing less than a lethal weapon. Tough penalties are necessary to stop the senseless drunk driving tragedies occurring around the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. I urge you to contact your legislator and encourage him or her to support this legislation.

indicated their willingness to cooperate with the film's producers.

Members of the First Parish congregation in Cohasset voiced their approval of filming to be done inside the meetinghouse. Rev. Edward Atkinson has been in touch with the movie representatives, and anticipated an agreement would be signed between the church and the producers.

According to Andrew, the movie will be filmed inside the church and outside on the historic common. Interior shots of the town hall auditorium will likely be included in the movie, he noted, along with the possible use of some private homes.

In Hingham, the producers have indicated their interest in filming exterior shots of the homes and streets in that town.

"We're definitely in the running," Andrew said, "but I guess the hierarchy in Hollywood hasn't made up its mind. They were impressed enough with Hingham and Cohasset to keep our hopes alive."

The executive secretary said town officials have received no negative comments from residents regarding the possibility of shooting the film in town.

Little Compton, on the other hand, has flatly rejected the offer from Hollywood, despite a predicted flow of $6 million into the local economy.

"I hope they come to Cohasset," Andrew commented. "It'll be a lot of fun. We really won't be able to understand much. It's pretty much a hurry up and wait type of process," Andrew noted, citing his experience as an observer during the shooting of "The Bostonians" on Martha's Vineyard a few years ago.

Until a final word is issued, Andrew said he will continue to field questions and interviews by the Boston and Rhode Island television stations and a host of newspapers.

"And it has been, since 1868, set aside as Decoration or Memorial Day throughout these United States."

He added, "Subsequent to the 500,000 lives that were lost in that war between the states, we saw 2,400 Americans die in the summer of 1898. World War I added another 160,000 and World War II took 405,000. We lost 54,000 in the Korean conflict and of course, 58,000 in Vietnam.

"I need not remind you of those missing in action," he said, "but there were 78,000 in World War II. There are 8,000 in Korea and 2,114 in Vietnam. May we truly never forget."

Foley commented, "Figures and facts are boring and dull. Someone has said that one death is a tragedy, 100,000 is a mere statistic. However, this is, after all, why we are here.

"Enough," he said, "I agree. It has become a lovely day. It is time now for some ice cream and some Coke and for me, a beer and perhaps a hot dog or a roast beef sandwich and maybe with a little luck, a cookout this afternoon and hopefully, a baseball game as well.

"I'm with you," he said. "Let's do just that again this year, and the next, and the next. Let us then truly enjoy this day.

"But as we do," he added, "let's just pause and reflect from time to time that the statistics of a few moments ago were once with us and like us.

"Let's remember please, that they were not fortunate enough to come home to us and to be with us to enjoy the beer and the hot dogs and the roast beef and the baseball game and the cookout."

He added, "...Or even, as is the case with some of us, to grow out of the uniforms that we wore so proudly.

"Therefore, to all comrades in war and peace, who have gone to that last roll call and the post eternal, let us echo finally, the sentiments we have heard so many times today in the playing of taps."

A single trumpeter sounds the lonesome notes of taps during Monday's ceremonies.

Wishes from Judy Gilman

Dear People,

Thank you all so much for your well wishes for me. I just realized today how many people had sent things when I was clearing out a basket that was clogging up my closet. All of them—the cards made by school children, the notes from representatives, the cards from Hingham committees, the well wishes from individuals—everything is most appreciated.

And, believe me, I am getting better. My physical therapists are constantly amazed at how much energy I have.

All the best,
Judy Gilman

Boys' Tennis

The boys finished off their regular season with four tremendous victories. Monday the boys blew past Hull 5-0; Tuesday they shut out Rockland, 5-0; and Wednesday they crushed Abington, 4-1. All the boys played well in these three matches.

However, the big news of the week came when the Skippers surpassed all expectations and beat Norwell which clinched the South Shore League title for Cohasset!

Coach Ed Amaral was very pleased with the win and the championship.

Amaral attributed the victory to his team's mental toughness and that the Skippers hung in when they just as easily could have given up.

Amaral felt the turning point of the match was when Rich Reddick and Chris Ryan both turned in victories. Amaral felt both Rich and Chris (at first and second singles) played their best matches of the year, and their superb performances helped to spark other team members on to win.

The come-from-behind-victory of second doubles team Jason Marsac and Steven Myers gave Cohasset its winning point. Amaral was especailly pleased with the way in which Jason and Steven never gave up and came back after losing a set to win the match.

Third singles player Fred Wilshire also had to come from behind to win his match and to give Cohasset its fourth insurance point. Amaral also cited his first doubles team of Derick Cacks and Greg Wallingford as playing well, but unfortunately these boys just fell short of a victory.

This week the Skippers begin the State Tournament. Wednesday, the boys face Canton in Cohasset. If the team wins Wednesday, it will travel to Sharon and take on Sharon's undefeated team. Amaral is confident his team is one of the toughest competitors in the state and should do very well in the tournament.

Girls' Tennis

The girls played exceptionally well last week and started off by beating Rockland 5-0, Monday. With this tremendous victory, the team only needed one more victory to make the state tournament. Unfortunately, Wednesday the girls lost a disappointing match to Abington. However, Friday Cohasset bounced back from this loss to defeat Norwell 4-1, thus insuring them a place in the state tournament.

The girls will start their tournament this week and have a good chance at being competitive throughout the entire event.

Boys' Baseball

The boys started off their last week of play by losing to Rockland, 9-5. Cohasset hit the ball extremely well in this game, unfortunately, Rockland did as well.

Todd Henry hit a big three-run double to lead the Skippers offensively. Hits were also had by Bobby Shultz, Philip Mahoney, Jamie Roy, Pete Sandblom, and Todd Fitzpatrick.

Wednesday, the boys lost a tough game to Abington, 14-13. Cohasset was about to come back in the seventh inning, unfortunately, the team just came up one run short.

Once again the team hit very well with Pete Sandblom hitting four for five to lead all batters. Both Bobby Shultz and Jamie Roy had two hits and two RBI's apiece.

Friday, in the Skippers last game of the year, they faced a talented pitcher and a powerful hitting team from Norwell and lost, 11-4. The boys played well but could not hold on against such a talented club.

Tom O'Brien had a great day up at bat and led the team on offense. David Shultz, Todd Henry and Philip Mahoney each had a hit as well.

Cohasset finished with eight wins, 11 losses, and one tie overall. Although the Skippers were disappointed they did not qualify for the tournament, they were pleased with their improvement over last season. Hopefully this improvement will continue, and next year the Skippers will have a tournament-bound team.

New officers elected to Cohasset Sailing Club

The Cohasset Sailing Club started its 28th season with the election of new officers.

Officers for 1986 include: Paul Carlson, Commodore; Steve Bartow, Vice Commodore; Jeff Bettinger, Treasurer; and Robert Davenport, Clerk. Head instructor will be Allan Cooke with Robert Jackson in charge of adult instruction.

Commodore Carlson said membership application forms have been sent to all Cohasset residents for the 1986 season. The deadline for returning applications is June 1 with classes beginning Monday, June 23. Membership information or applications can be obtained from membership chairman, Harry St. Onge at 383-9457.

The Cohasset Sailing Club is a non-profit organization founded in 1960. Since then, nearly 4000 students have enrolled in the sailing programs. Approximately 120 youngsters attended classes last season.

The club offers a complete schedule of junior and adult training from beginner level through advanced on a fleet of ten 15-foot mercurys and new turnabouts. Three new turnabouts are scheduled to join the fleet this season bringing the total to six of the new boats.

Junior sailors can choose from four different levels of instruction based on age and sailing ability. Classes are held three days a week for two hours and include classroom instruction and a large amount of in-the-boat time. Prior sailing experience is not necessary to enroll, however, students must have completed the fourth grade by June 1986 or be at least 10 years old by Labor Day 1986.

Adult training is available in basic or intermediate instruction for three hours a day during the weekend. Classroom instruction is combined with practical boat handling and practice racing in the outer harbor.

The racing family can enjoy the Stanton Series which allows parents and juniors to share racing competition Wednesday evenings.

In addition to sailing instruction, club membership allows free use of all boats anytime they are not being used for instruction. This is generally after 4 p.m. on weekdays and after noon on weekends. For sailors with their own boat, the club can provide convenient dinghy space at the club's floats.

A start-of-the-season social event is being planned and will be announced soon.

Mormon philosophy-maintaining a fit mind

Staying healthy is a way of life for Polly Doggett.

A member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latterday Saints, Doggett explained a basis of the Mormon philosophy is to maintain a fit mind and body.

Doggett, a Cohasset resident, says she follows that doctrine by walking several times a week around town. She also refrains from eating a lot of red meat.

In conjunction with her physical awareness, Doggett recently participated in an event that utilized her physical ability, combined with the Mormon philosophy of family.

Two weeks ago, the middle-aged Cohasset resident participated in the 10 K Wednesday's Child walk. The proceeds from the fun-walk were given to the Massachusetts Adoption Resource Center, the foundation which serves to match children with adoptive parents.

The walk was sponsored by Channel 4's Jack Williams and his weekly-featured program, "Wednesday's Child."

"I completed it," she said last week, with the strain of fatigue in her voice. "It took me two and a half hours, but I did it!"

Doggett explained as a fan of the Channel 4 celebrity, she was attracted to the event. But more than that, this 10 K athletic event would serve two purposes at once - a combination love of health and family.

"This is where the Church played a role," she said. "It is very important that Mormons remain physically fit. We also stress the importance of family and loving relationships."

A devoted Mormon, Doggett explained the Mormon Health Code which is part of the Church's beliefs. More than 150 years ago, Prophet Joseph Smith received a revelation from God. This 'word of wisdom' dealt with health measures to be followed by Church members. "We stress eating good food," she stated. "Prophet Smith told us to eat only whole grains, and meat sparingly. We are told to abstain from alcohol, tobacco, tea and coffee.

"Members have taken those words to heart. And now, generations later, doctors are telling everyone the same thing."

The religious philosophy of her Church maintains a healthy body is an integral part of receiving and spreading the gospel.

More surprising to the uninitiated, Doggett stated, is that statistics have shown Mormons live longer and have lower incidents of cancer and heart ailments than the general population.

Doggett said she has always been physically fit-minded. Even in college, her friends would comment about her "exercise mania."

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latterday Saints is currently sponsoring a special program which highlights the importance of this philosophy. The Physical Fitness Award Program began in March, she said. The idea is to mark off the number of times you walk, swim, cycle or jog.

"The Church is attempting to promote, in an enjoyable way, the concept of good physical health. And again, this is a program the entire family can participate in," she noted.

Doggett's family has assisted her in finding a more healthful way of living. Last summer she visited her son in Provo, Utah. To her surprise, he and his wife had registered Doggett in a week's seminar "Especially for Seniors."

Polly Doggett

One of the more interesting lectures at Brigham Young University was by Dr. Garth Fisher, a researcher and psychologist.

He talked extensively about his book, "Lowering Your Fat Thermostat," and discussed the need to exercise and eat properly. A correct diet and daily exercise such as walking, running or swimming, will maintain a healthy mind and body, the researcher told the audience.

"It's so important to lower your intake of salt, fat and sugar. We should enjoy our foods for themselves alone, not by garnishing them with sauces and creams," she explained.

Doggett's son also sent her a cookbook by La Rene Gaunt entitled, "Recipes to Lower Your Fat Thermostat."

"I'm slowly getting into this book and trying the recipes," she said last week. "In fact, I recently had some unexpected company and tried one of the recipes out on them. It was delicious! The children even had seconds!"

If anyone would like to talk to Doggett about improving your diet and exercise regimen, call her at 383-1847.

House O.K.'s C.G. funds

Recently the House of Representatives unanimously agreed to legislation sponsored by Congressman Gerry Studds to authorize $2.2 billion for the U.S. Coast Guard in 1987.

During House debate, Studds said the Coast Guard is not presently operating at the level it has been able to maintain in recent years. This bill could help the Coast Guard shift gears and begin once again to operate at full speed.

Even with this legislation, Studds said "full speed" does not mean the Coast Guard will have enough money to operate comfortably or to perform all the patrols, conduct all the training, or do all the maintenance and repair work it should be able to do.

It will not put an end to 15-hour days and 90-hour work weeks for Coast Guard personnel; it will not close the vast chasm that has existed for more than a decade between Coast Guard resources and its responsibilities under federal law. But the enactment and implementation of this bill would permit the full use of the people and equipment the Coast Guard now has on hand, and it would put an end - for one year, at least - to further erosion in the size or capabilities of the service.

So. Shore Conservatory of Music opens summer term

The summer term at the three branches of the South Shore Conservatory is scheduled to begin the week of June 23 with a variety of lessons and special programs to enrich the summer for all ages.

The main branch in Hingham will offer lessons Monday through Friday for the eight-week term at their school at Cedar Hill.

At the Hingham school, the summer progams for children will include a six-week Preschool with Maureen Connolly, head of the regular preschool. Children may take a two or three-day program for three or six weeks from 9 to 11:30 a.m.

Preschool will be mostly outdoors and Karen Rafferty, who specializes in early childhood music training, will work with the children for 45 minutes each week. For a parent and child six months to three years (separated into age groups), the Conservatory will continue the successful "Music for Mom/Dad and Me" classes, which will be taught Wednesday mornings by Sarah Smith. She is a Kodaly and voice specialist and works with the parents and children. They will share songs, poetry and movement for a first exposure to the world of music.

Rafferty wil teach the Joy of Music classes for children 4 to 7. This popular program uses song, speech, movement and musical games to involve children in the process of experiencing and understanding the joy of music . . . a good foundation for later musical study.

Summer Strings will be directed by Barta Nevel of the Suzuki string faculty. She will offer children 8 to 17 the experience and fun of learning to play together; all strings are welcome; one year of experience playing the instrument is necessary, but no previous ensemble experience is needed.

The Creative Dramatic Workshops will be offered during the summer for children 7 to 12, with a Introduction to Creative Dramatics for ages 5 to 7. Ellen Kelly will direct these classes on Wednesday afternoons. The summer Dance Program on Thursdays will offer Introduction to Dance (4 to 6 years) with Marlene Moyer and Classic Ballet classes with Christie Kennedy for older children.

The Conservatory offers piano and violin lessons for children 4 to 8, taught by the famed Suzuki method. These are private lessons with specially trained faculty and one of the parents must commit themselves to the program, attending lessons and working with the child at home. New parents will have an orientation period. Contact the SSCM office for more detailed information, 749-7565.

Adults may enjoy private instrumental or voice lessons, ballet and jazz dance. Jean Ann Baker will continue her Jazz Dance classes, one for teens and one for adults, on Monday evenings. Christie Kennedy will teach an adult ballet class on Thursday evening. Sarah Smith will start a new Intimate Opera Workshop on Tuesday evenings for advanced students and experienced singers. They will perform a short opera or scenes from operas (in English) at the end of the term. Chamber Music Ensembles for those who have had the basics and can read music will be formed according to instrumentation and level of ability. For adults and teens who like to "act up," Ellen Kelly will direct a Studio Workshop on Wednesday.

The Conservatory is proud of its Jazz/Rock Program. It is staffed with professional artists in the field: Jeff Harringon (sax), Paul Shumsky (guitar), Mark Kross (piano) and Ed Sorrentino (percussion). They will form various jazz/rock groups according to ability and instrumentation on Thursday nights. Paul Shumsky will work with a Rock Combo on Tuesday night.

Also on Tuesday, Ed Sorrentino will conduct an intermediate and an advanced Big Band. Private lessons are available and private improvisation instruction. Jeff Harrington will offer a class on Jazz/Rock Theory and Improvisation on Thursday evenings. Ask for a brochure for further information.

For a brochure which lists the programs offered in all three branches, call 749-7565 Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Mass Audubon Society plans bird walk May 30

In hope of clear skies on Wednesday, May 28, a stargazing program with Gerry Flaherty will be offered at 8 p.m. at the Mass. Audubon Society, 2000 Main St., Marshfield. The three bright morning planets which are gradually moving into the evening sky, should be visible. Venus is already up there, Saturn is now visible from dawn to dusk, and Mars has been rising earlier each night during the month.

Viewers will also look at other bright stars and constellations which make up the summer sky. The fee is $2 for members, $3 for non-members. Children will be $1 less.

Bird Walk

A Friday morning bird walk will be held May 30 at 9 a.m.

This is the last spring bird walk, so don't miss it! David Clapp will be taking a group to Daniel Webster Farm to look for bobolinks and meadowlarks in the tall grasses, warblers around the field edges, and maybe you'll find the yellow-crowned night heron spotted on the interpretive paddle down the Green Harbor River last week. The fee is $2 for members, $3 for non-members.

On May 31, paper capers will be held for children between 9 and 11 a.m. and for adults between noon and 7 p.m.

Papermaking is an art as well as a science, since it takes some experimentation and there's lots of opportunity for creativity. You will learn the history and techniques of papermaking and use natural and recycled materials to make the paper. The fee is $4 for members, $5 for non-members. Limit eight persons.

A trip to the Garden In the Woods will be held June 4 between 8:30 and 2:30 p.m. This may be your last chance to see spring wild flowers. Meet at the Sanctuary office. Fee is $6 for members, $8 for non-members. Bring a lunch.

Sign-up now for the next interpretive paddle down the Green Harbor River with David Clapp and Ellyn Einhorn on Tuesday, June 10, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

David Clapp's next talk at the Hingham library is June 12 at 7:30 p.m. The subject will be migrating birds of coastal New England. The program is free and open to the public.

"Stings" vie for championship

The Cohasset "Stings," with a record of seven wins and one loss, is currently tied with the Plymouth "Waves" for first place in the Boys (under age 10) Division of the Coastal Soccer League.

The "Stings" coached by Steve Endris, had been unbeaten and unscored upon and dominated their first six opponents. Their only loss was in a rematch in Plymouth last week, when the team playing without substitutes lost 3 to 2.

A speedy and opportunistic front line of players has scored over 50 goals while limiting their opponents to four. Among the forwards on the team are: Andrew Pozatek, Charlie Endris, Greg Lowenhagen, Chris Rolandelli, Chris Kondrat, Brendan Kinchla, Jamie Kondrat, Herb Crehan and Scott Therieault.

A stalwart defense led by Eric Henry, James Magner, David Northnagle, Wes DeSantis, Ben Redfield, Nick Terry, Ryan Freeman, Mike Riley and Brian Riley, together with a stingy crew of goalkeepers have made opponents shutter and partisans cheer.

This week the team was selected to participate in a clinic sponsored by the North American Soccer Camps Inc., as part of the Camp's demonstration and promotion in Cohasset.

The clinic, which is open to the public will be held Sunday, June 1 at 6 p.m. at Milliken Field. The clinic is held in conjunction with the Cohasset Recreation Department and the Cohasset Soccer league.

North American Soccer Camps Inc. has successfully conducted a summer soccer camp in Cohasset each August for the last two years.

This year's camp will be held from Monday, August 11 to Saturday, August 18. Sign-up is through the Cohasset Recreation Department until Friday, June 6.

At the South Shore Science Center. . .

Learn to see things in a new light! Phil Swanson will lead a two-day beginners' photography workshop for adults and young adults on May 29 and 31 at the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell.

On Thursday, May 29, from 8 to 10 p.m., there will be a lively lecture on the elements of photography with gorgeous sample slides to illustrate good composition. On Saturday, May 31 from 10 a.m. to noon, travel to several natural areas on the South Shore to practice photography from a new perspective. Bring your camera on both days—any camera will do! Pre-paid registration required (members/$10; non-members/ $12.50 for both sessions, or members/$6; non-members/$7 for one session). Call 659-2559 to register.

Armchair to Ireland

On Friday, May 30 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., visit Ireland with Helen and John Gallop. Roam this beautiful isle, visit homes, churches, farmland, gardens and castles. Following the talk, go outside to view the Andromeda Galaxy, double stars and other deep sky objects. Pre-paid registration required (members/$3; non-members/$4; under 14 yrs./$1.50). Call 659-2559.

Committee passes programs for special needs students

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

The South Shore Regional School Committee approved plans for two special needs programs and a program to introduce junior high and elementary school students to vocational education.

Superintendent-Director Clifford W. Easton presented the plans to the school committee last week. Easton said that a program which mainstreams special needs students with regular students operated this year.

Aides supervise the special needs students in regular vocational classes; every other week. The students receive academic instruction through the North River Collaborative.

"The regular students and the special needs students work side by side," Easton said. "There's a lot of interaction between the students.

"Our kids sometimes act as tutors," he said. "The special needs students usually perform jobs of lower level skills. They receive job-oriented rather than occupational-oriented education."

A new proposal, an "alternative hours" program, also was approved. The program developed by Easton, Rockland School Superintendent John Rogers and North River Collaborative Director Patricia Linari, would bring special needs students to South Shore Vo-Tech at the end of the school day for vocational courses.

Students would receive academic instruction at schools in their communities or at two special classrooms at Rockland High School. The vocational program at Vo-Tech would be funded by state grants, and communities that send students to the Rockland classes would be assessed a fee for the service.

"The program would give students vocational and technical skills on a job-focus basis," Easton said. "It would be for students who range from being quite capable to those with emotional difficulties."

Easton said that on-site training in the community would be included for students as they progressed through the program.

Easton noted that 23 of Vo-Tech's 54 teachers were taking courses to become certified to teach special needs students.

"Almost 50 percent of our staff is taking 18 credits to become qualified for special needs instruction," he said. "Our school has perhaps the highest percentage of teachers in the state, preparing to become special needs instructors."

Some school committee members applauded the programs.

"We're addressing an issue that's a serious problem in all our towns," said Dennis Blackwell of Hanover.

"This is our goal," added Lloyd Patriquin of Whitman. "We want to offer quality education to everybody."

A third program, a junior high exploratory program, would introduce young students to various programs at Vo-Tech.

"It serves as a recruting program," Easton said. "It's essentially to rejuvenate the concept called career education."

Elementary and junior high students would be brought to Vo-Tech on field trips and would be able to participate in hands-on activities in various vocational fields.

"It's aimed at all students," Easton said. "They can explore a variety of career areas. We want to make students aware of the advantages of a vocational education."

"There are little or no industrial arts courses for students in some communities," said Developer Director Paul Babcock. "Some kids don't know what precision metal fabrication is, for example."

Welcome Brieda

The school committee welcomed a new representative from Scituate, 1985 Vo-Tech graduate Breida McDonough. McDonough was class president and state president of the Vocational Industrial Clubs of America.

"I was very involved in school politics and saw the workings of the school," she said. "When the opportunity came for an opening on the committee, I felt obligated to serve."

"I learned a lot about my trade and myself at this school," said the electronics student who currently is a technician at QED Research in Norwell. "I want to give something back to the school."

McDonough replaces Joan DeGeorge Schirmer, who resigned.

Summer Theater registration

A final reminder to all area youths between 13 and 22 years old that the Young People's Summer Theatre will hold its annual registration meeting Monday, June 2 at 7 p.m. at the First Trinitarian Congregational Church on Country Way in Scituate.

Anyone who joins YPST will perform in both shows. No one is turned down from membership, but auditions are held for casting the shows.

Auditions will be held on Saturday, June 7, from 7 to 10 p.m. at the Congregational Church, and again Sunday, June 8 from 6 to 10 p.m. at St. Luke's Episcopal Church on First Parish Rd. (Rte. 3A). Those joining should only attend one of the audition nights.

'Belarus Secret' author speaks to congregation

Former Justice Department prosecutor John Loftus spoke last week at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham about his involvement in the investigation of Nazi war criminals living in the United States.

"Did you ever wonder what an Irish Catholic attorney is doing up here telling you about the holocaust?" Loftus said.

"Most gentile American kids read around six sentences on the holocaust in school," he said. "My background was similar."

Loftus, who for two and a half years was involved in a federal investigation of illegal immigration of Nazis into the United States, took his story to 60 Minutes and wrote The Belarus Secret in 1982 about his experiences.

Loftus had access to classified documents of U.S. intelligence agencies during the investigation. "Did you ever see the movie Raiders of the Lost Ark?" he asked. "It's like the final scene.

"There are 20 underground vaults in Washington, D.C., each an acre large, crammed full of documents," he said. "Nobody knows what's down there.

"One day I walked into a vault and found 40-year-old files with a 75 year declassification period," he said. "The information from those files is shocking."

Loftus said Nazis from Eastern Europe, mostly from Byelorussia in the western Soviet Union, were recruited by British and French intelligence agencies and by the Vatican to serve as anti-communist agents.

When guerilla efforts failed, the Nazi criminals were settled secretly in the United States by some State Department officials.

"President Truman was strongly against allowing war criminals in the country," Loftus said, "but there was a tiny group of State Department officials who wanted to use the Nazis as agents.

"This small group thought that President Dewey would approve of their practices after he won the election," said Loftus, "and they went behind Truman's back. What Truman didn't know was that his own intelligence officers were lying to him."

One of the Nazis brought to America by State Department officials was Stanislaw Stankievich, a Nazi in Byelorussia responsible for the slaughter of 7,000 Jews in the city of Borissow.

"A U.S. Representative held up his name in the Congressional Record in 1948 as one who should never be allowed to enter this country," said Loftus. "The CIA and the Army thought he was a double agent and kept him from America. The State Department, ignoring all the evidence, smuggled him into this country in 1959."

"I couldn't believe the records," he said. "I said to myself that this couldn't have happened in America."

Loftus said that many of the Byelorussian Nazis settled in South River, New Jersey. A monument stands there in memory of those who fought for Byelorussia's freedom. On top of the monument is the symbol of the Belarus SS, the Nazi unit that killed thousands of Byelorussian Jews.

Loftus, who is an attorney in Rockland, continues to investigate the U.S. cover-up of illegal Nazi immigration to the United States.

"The idea is not to hunt down a few Nazis," he said, "but for deterrence. It may be too late for justice, but it's not too late for the truth.

"Some crimes are too horrible to be forgiven," said Loftus. "Genocide knows no statute of limitations."

Loftus urged people to voice their support for House Resolution 3841 to their congressmen. The measure would declassify the documents Loftus saw in the Justice Department's investigation. If the measure is not adopted the documents will not be declassified for another 30 years.

Loftus said that government agencies were helpful in the investigation. "You'd be surprised at how many decent people there are in government, especially in the intelligence service," he said.

Loftus said that it's important to teach children about the holocaust. "This is the only place on earth where you and I are free to speak the truth to our children," he said. "We must teach them about this genocide, so that it doesn't happen again."

Art center classes spread out

For the budding young artist, a series of art classes will be offered in four communities on the South Shore - Cohasset, Hingham, Hull and Norwell.

The South Shore Art Center at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset is once again making a major effort to bring its young artist classes out to the communities of the South Shore. The courses, which are all to begin in May, require advanced registration.

The course offerings in Cohasset include Serena Brundige's Moms and Tots, on Mondays beginning May 12 from 10 to 11 a.m.; Syma's Child's Clay and Sculpture, Wednesdays beginning May 7 from 4 to 5:30 p.m.; Lizabeth Koopman-Wyman's Painting and Drawing II, Thursdays beginning May 15 from 4 to 5:30 p.m.; and Susan Rodgerson's Junior High Workshop, Fridays beginning May 16 from 4-5:30 p.m.

In Hingham at the Community Center the two course offerings are Susan Rodgerson's Painting and Drawing II on Mondays starting May 19 from 4 to 5:30 p.m.; and Coyle's How to Create on Wednesdays starting May 21 from 4 to 5:30 p.m. And in Hull at Temple Beth Shalom the two courses are Rodgerson's Painting and Drawing I on Thursdays starting May 22 from 4 to 5:30 p.m.; and Nancy Connolly Mixed Media and Clay on Mondays starting May 5 from 4 to 5:30 p.m.

Painting and Drawing I for ages six to eleven and Painting and Drawing II for ages nine to twelve are geared to the ability level of the students in the courses. In Painting and Drawing I students learn about design, composition and color using craypas, tempera and watercolors. Young artists learn basic drawing and painting skills to projects geared to their age level.

In Painting and Drawing II, instruction includes mirror drawing, basics of landscape and use of acrylic paint. Students will also be introduced to collograph printing.

Brundige's Moms and Tots course is designed for moms and their three and four-year-olds. The class will introduce moms to projects they can then reproduce at home with their youngsters. Brundige will explore batik dip designs, magic color circles and plastacene. This is an excellent opportunity for moms and tots to work together on creative projects so appealing to your children.

In the Junior High Workshop for ages twelve to fourteen, students will use a variety of materials in combination with one another. Activities will emphasize individual expression and explore various art concepts through drawing, painting and mixed media.

The two clay courses for ages six to twelve work with clay, cardboard, wood, recycled materials and lots of imagination to create three-dimensional art work and to teach youngsters basic design.

Coyle's How to Create Workshop for ages seven to eleven begins with two short art films designed to stimulate children for the art activity which follows including clay, collage, monoprint, music making or box construction.

Information and registration for these courses at the Center's various locations may be obtained through the Center's main office in Cohasset by calling 383-9548. The expansion of the young artist department has been made possible through a grant from the Joseph Drown Foundation.

interest. We also have a lot of requests from community groups who would like to use the center."

The original plans to renovate the barn would have given the center an extra 1,400 square feet of space. The plans for an addition will afford the center more than 5,000 square feet of space.

"This will give us a really large gymnastics area, which is what we really need," Pratt stated. "We'll have an all new nursery school facility on the lower level and the gym on the second level." The two most popular center programs currently take place in the same room, and personnel and equipment must continually be interchanged for the two activities.

"Our other goal," Pratt noted, "is to have enough space in the center to offer our facilities to other community groups. Right now, the Boy Scouts have to use the Osgood School, and other groups have to use the town hall. We want to get the non-town activities out of the town hall and into our community facility."

The community center two years ago received a $20,000 grant from the South Shore Playhouse Associates. "We'll be asking for another grant to help us meet this new goal," Pratt said.

Fundraising activities will be stepped up immediately. "We're really going to give a big push this summer," he noted. "Once we have concrete plans, then we'll really start moving on the fundraising."

The center's president stated the fundraising efforts "will be very visible" not only in Cohasset, but throughout the South Shore. "We have 100 members from Scituate alone," he explained.

"The last few months, we haven't done any real fundraising," he added. "The board of directors was wavering back and forth, trying to decide what we should do. Now we've put together a package that will probably be acceptable to everyone."

Three architects have submitted plans for the addition work. The center's directors have been working with one architectural firm, Merton - Barrows Associates of Hingham. Final plans will be presented for the board's approval June 5.

"The first of this year," Pratt explained, "we realized that the needs of the center would not be met by renovation of the barn. The decision was made to go ahead with the renovation project four years ago. A lot has changed since then, and our membership has really increased."

Last fall, the center's directors applied for a special permit and variance to reconstruct the barn. The plans were approved by the local zoning board of appeals. Permission was also granted by the historical district commission.

The addition plans will not need town approval, Pratt figured. As soon as the plans are finalized, fundraising will begin again in earnest and a contractor will be hired.

Ideally, Pratt said, construction will begin this summer and conclude by the start of the fall nursery school session. "We will hire a contractor with the understanding he'll have about eight weeks to complete the project," Pratt said. "Hopefully, we can finish by the start of school. But if we have to delay the start of nursery school by a week, that shouldn't be too much of a problem."

The Cohasset Community Center has been a fixture in this town for about 40 years. Its first president and founder was the late Nate Hurwitz, the father of Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray. The center was originally located at the corner of Sohier and North Main Streets and moved to its current location in the late 1940's.

Pratt said the fundraising program for the new two-level addition will be rejuvenated once the plans are formally approved. Included in the fundraising effort will be an eight-minute video film of the center's expanded programs and activities.

No solution found for attendance problem

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

A solution failed to show up during the school committee's heated debate last week regarding school attendance policy.

Frances Cronin, president of the faculty senate told the committee teachers are committed to the effective enforcement of the policy.

According to attendance records, students are bailing out. The problem is especially prevalent just before and just after vacations. Two days before the start of spring break this year, nearly half the senior class was absent. The following day, 85 of 127 seniors did not attend school.

The first day following spring break, 43 students were out. These figures represent an alarming increase over last year's rate, an average of about 20 more senior absences on each of the aforementioned days this year over last year.

"Parents are taking kids out for the cheap air fares and longer stays in Bermuda," Superintendent Eugene Crowell charged. "This diminishes the quality of education because of all the time teachers need to spend remediating students."

Committee member Diana Kornet agreed. "Teachers are teaching in classrooms that are sometimes 1/3 to 2/3 empty," she said. "This isn't fair to the kids who are there when they're supposed to be."

She argued, time spent on make-ups and revisions are unfair both to teachers and conscientious students.

While they all agreed something has to be done about the attendance problem, they disagreed on the "harshness" of attendance policy.

The present policy, which factors zeros into a student's grade-point average for work missed during unexcused absences, has been assailed as being too harsh.

"To go from a 'C' to an 'F' when the program is implemented so inconsistently, is too harsh a punishment," committee member Chris Ford said.

Crowell disagreed, "I don't think it's harsh enough. We should remind the parents about prior notice of absence. One of the biggest things we should be teaching kids, is to be responsible for their tasks. If they do this at their jobs, they will get fired. It's the only ammunition we have. It's their paycheck."

Cronin added, "If the parent knows his kid will get a zero, he'll remember to send prior notice."

Committee Chairman Joseph Nedrow tried to strike a middle ground. "Kids are being punished for bailing out," he said, "but we aren't answering the question of why. We need to correct the problem.

"Where kids have control," he added, "we should be strict, but if a problem starts happening, we shouldn't be reactive. We should be preactive."

Cronin decried the inconsistencies in Cohasset's plan and told the committee of Scituate's seven-line sheets.

On these sheets is recorded the student's attendance record, she said, where excused absences are initialled. The student, his parents and his teachers all would know of his record. The system leaves little room for ambiguity.

In such few cases, there would be an appeals process.

Kornet hailed the plan. "I think the idea of a seven-line slip is excellent and logical," she said. "Some students think they have all the time in the world. Now, there would be no question; you could use the slip as a ticket to test make-ups.

Ford and Kornet formed a subcommittee and will continue to study the issue.

the call of duty," it stated.

"Hundreds of people have signed it," Golden added.

In 1973, the school committee voted unanimously to appoint Mr. Di high school principal, citing his thorough knowledge of the Cohasset High School faculty and students. Richard Streeter became principal after more than one year of legal appeals.

Following their discussion with Golden Wednesday night, the school committee is expected to interview the three final candidates for the position. The finalists were named after intensive interviews by members of the search committees. It was their unanimous decision to forward the three top candidates to the school committee. Search committee members included teachers, parents, residents, and students. The finalists included: Mary Gallagher, assistant principal at Hingham High School, Robert Jarvis of Hingham, principal of Methuen High School, and Thomas Davis, principal of Westbury High School in Houston, Tex.

The committee is expected to vote on the appointment at a separate meeting Thursday night at 8 p.m.

Golden explained her reasons for initiating the petition. "He's so familiar with the system and the kids in this system," she said. "Whatever degrees these other people have, they can't hold a candle to Mr. Di's qualifications and his love for our children."

The former school committee member previously stated in a letter to the Mariner, "Mr. Di is respected by both students and parents as a dedicated teacher and administrator. His educational background, credentials and recommendations fully qualify him for this position. Mr. Di knows our children, our system, its strengths and weaknesses and our expectations as parents and taxpayers. Obviously, he wants to continue to serve Cohasset with the opportunity of strengthening our system. I wish to join the many townspeople, students and his fellow educators who have expressed endorsement of his candidacy."

Area music concerts planned at Fort Revere site

It's an event that has attracted people from Cohasset and Hingham into Hull the past four years.

Residents throughout the South Shore have become aware of the annual Fort Revere Harborlight Concerts and anxiously await the summertime concerts. Located on a beautiful hillside setting, the harborlight concerts have become a summer tradition in Hull.

The concerts will be held again this year, beginning Sunday, June 29 and concluding with a fourth concert Saturday, Aug. 9.

The fort, one of the last remaining star forts used in the Revolutionary War, is a perfect setting for these outdoor art concerts, according organizer Polly Feinberg. "It's at the far end of Hull," she said, "overlooking the ocean. It's beautiful. From the top of this hill you can see the two lighthouses, the Cohasset coast, and the lights of the city. It's a perfect place for an outdoor concert."

Beginning June 29 at 7 p.m., the East Bay Jazz Band will perform. The second concert, Saturday, July 12, will feature the North Shore Acapella. This is a group of male singers who perform 'oldies' Top 40 hits. The next concert will take place July 27, featuring the PF Flyers Dance Company. Feinberg, a member of the troupe, explained the company performs all types of dance from pop, ballet, to Gershwin dance numbers. "You name it, we dance to it," she said, noting this semi-pro dance organization rehearses continually throughout the year.

The fourth concert will feature One People - a Reggae band which was popular with last summer's audience.

Proceeds from the summer concerts will go toward the renovation and restoration project at Fort Revere. Feinberg explained the fort, an historic landmark in Hull, has been vandalized for many years. There is an abundance of graffiti along the outer walls of the structure.

"In 1976 for the Bicentennial, the town tried to clean it up, but every year there's more and more graffiti on the walls," she said.

"We'd like to really clean this building up, and use it continually for all sorts of community programs," she added.

The concerts attract 150-250 people, although the area can accommodate up to 400 persons. "It's like the esplanade," Feinberg said. "People come with blankets and refreshments and have a wonderful time listening to the music."

One reason the concerts are held at the Fort is to make people aware of the structure. "If more people see this beautiful place and how run down it's become, they'll see it's necessary to restore it. We want more and more people aware of Fort Revere, and maybe there'll be less vandalism, she added."

Tickets for the concerts are $4 each in advance, or $4.50 at the door. Payments may be sent to Harborlights Concerts, P.O. Box 205, Hull, Mass. 02045.

There is public parking available at the Jacobs School, with a shuttle bus which will transport patrons to the concert. In the event of rain, the concert will be held at the Jacobs School.

"People come from Hingham and Cohasset and they love it," Feinberg said. "We welcome everyone."

School committee serves an advisory role

(This is one of the essays submitted in the Gilbert Tower writing contest. The essays, written by members of high school A.P. history class, were reviewed by a panel of judges and will be published in the Mariner.)

By Lisa Shumaker
Mariner Correspondent

What lies in the future for Cohasset's public schools, and who brings about this future? These questions have been asked many times by concerned parents and students and the answers are sometimes difficult to understand. While many feel that school planning is the result of the School Committee's deliberations only, this, in fact, is not the case.

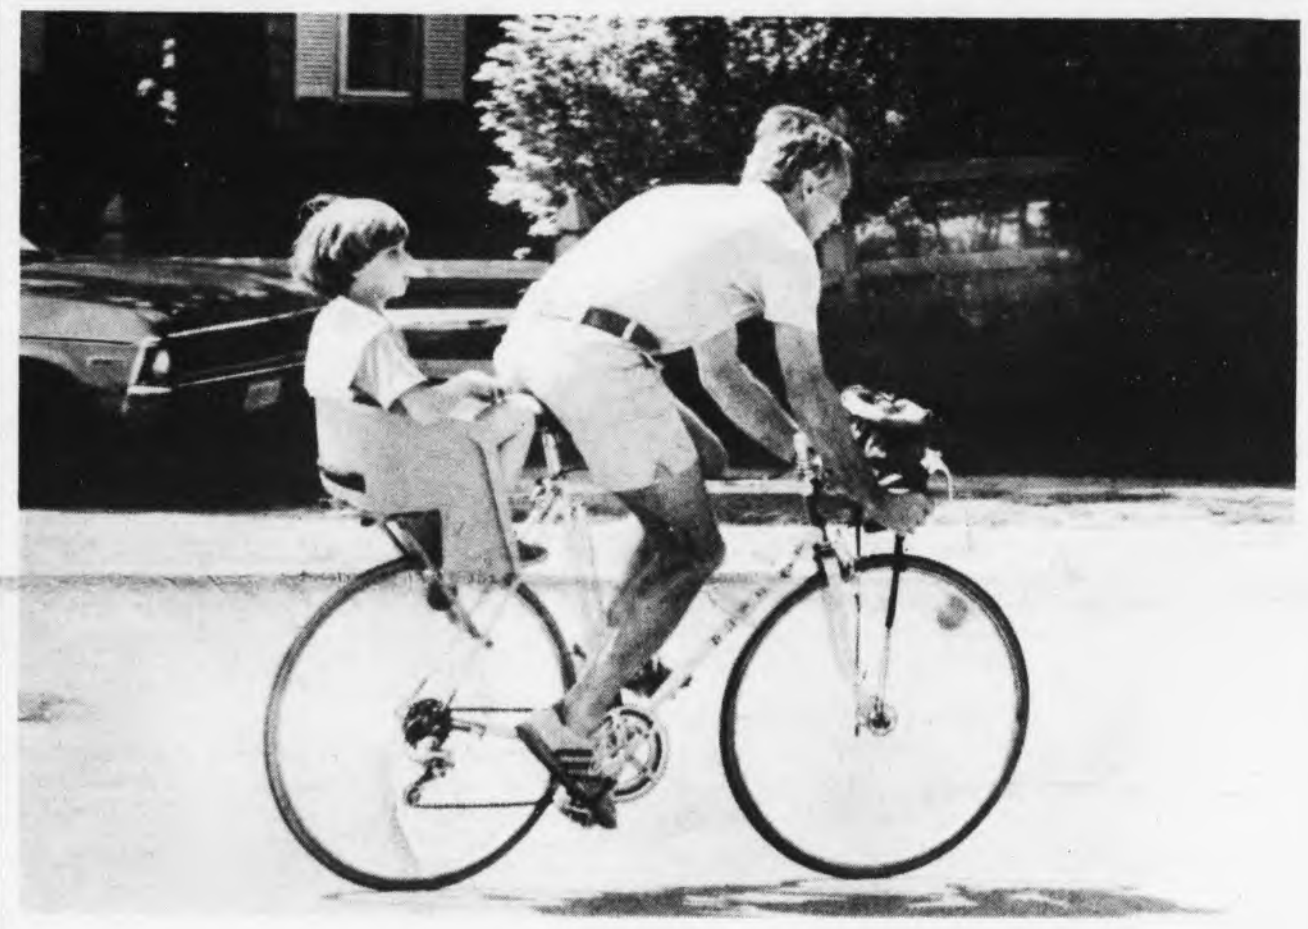
In reality, the School Committee in Cohasset has a very limited role in planning future goals and changes in the schools for two main reasons. First, the School Committee consists of town representatives who are not professional educators. It would be wrong to have the School Committee make decisions that would be handled much better by the administrators of the schools who are much more qualified in the field of education. Second, after Proposition 2½ went into effect, the fiscal autonomy which the School Committees of Massachusetts had enjoyed up until this point was now taken away from them. Today, the School Committee does not have the same flexibility with money as it had previously, and thus, this law put an end to many of the School Committee's plans.

The School Committee mainly serves to advise the administration and look into any problems that might arise in the school system. Usually, if a change is needed in some department, a teacher involved in the problem will notify the department head. In turn, the department head will alert someone in the administration, either the principal of the school involved or the superintendent of schools, as to what changes he or she feels should be made to improve the situation or to erase the problem. Finally, the administrator will bring the problem and most often a solution to the School Committee, which looks into the situation and sees that it is being handled with best interests of the students and the town in mind. If the problem is too big for the Committee to handle itself, it will create a sub-committee which very often includes an expert or two in the area concerned. Thus, with this system, Cohasset's public schools are kept running smoothly and efficiently.

The School Committee has been working on several problems whose solutions should be seen in the very near future. For instance, a new state law just went into effect which requires all school buses more than eight years old to be replaced in the next three to four years. Thus, the Committee is about to launch a program which would enable Cohasset to purchase two to three buses a year for the next several years. Furthermore, Mrs. Wondolowski, the school enrichment coordinator, has been increasing the gifted and talented program with the Committee's help. This new program would include more students and would be held within class time. Finally, Mike Gill, the school's Health Coordinator, has brought to the Committee's attention that the elementary schools might benefit from an adjustment counselor. This person would serve as not only a guidance counselor to the children, but would help during crises and be useful to the teachers as well. The Committee has formed a sub-committee to look into this idea, and a decision should be made very soon.

Other problems without concrete solutions have just recently been introduced to the School Committee and are just being looked into. For example, the high school has been having problems with its general classes. Not enough students fit this category to constitute a complete class and have been put into college preparatory classes. And yet, most of these general students find difficulty with these college preparatory classes. This had been presented to the School Committee and administrators to solve. Furthermore, the elementary classes are getting smaller in numbers every year, although the Joseph Osgood and Deer Hill schools are fully used. At this point, a time may come when these schools are underutilized and inefficient. The School Committee must always keep this serious possibility in mind and must figure out a way in which this will not happen.

Planning in the schools results from the hard work and genuine concerns of many people in Cohasset. Although the administrators and School Committee may get credit for running the schools, the real changes and goals result from the combined efforts of teachers, parents, and even students of Cohasset.



Jamie DeMichele, 5½, and dad Don DeMichele start the five-mile course of the recent Ride-A-Bike marathon held May 18.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Notes & Comment from the State Convention

Having irked Republicans with a thumb-nail sketch of their 1986 state convention (see letter published elsewhere on this page) it is only fair to do the same to the Democrats.

As reported last week, the hard news at this convention, namely the nomination of Gerard D'Amico for lt. governor, really took everyone by surprise. What this convention was supposed to be, indeed what before the little stinkbomb D'Amico placed in Evelyn Murphy's way to glory it was, was the reaffirmation by the Dukakis crowd that their governor and they are our secular saviors.

The event before and after D'Amico was, therefore, pretty darm camp. A Boston Celtic metaphor will perhaps give you an idea of how camp it was. Celtic fanatics of my age and giddy comportment will never forget the glorious evening in 1969 when the Celtics, in Bill Russell's and Sam Jones' last game, faced the Lakers in the seventh and deciding playoff game in Los Angeles. The Celtics were in decline, and so certain was Laker owner Jack Kent Cooke of a Laker victory that he had thousands of balloons raised to the eves of the Los Angeles Forum, there to be dropped on the fallen Celtics upon their defeat. Alas, the Celtics prevailed and the balloons remained aloft, a monument to California camp and a sweet memory for those of us who count time in Celtic seasons.

Well, Jack Kent Cooke must have advanced this convention, for as one entered the steamy arena, there were his undescended balloons clinging to the roof of the Springfield Civic Center. And when Gov. Dukakis managed to win a great victory over his non-opponent, let us call him Commander Zero, Cooke's balloons were released to earth. It was awful. As the governor and his family waved from the podium, his middle-aged footsoldiers on the floor stomped the balloons to eternity. It sounded as though we were under terrorist attack, and the spectacle only lacked for a walk-on by Jack Nicholson to be worthy of Southern California.

Dukakis' acceptance speech was a terrifically slight improvement over the balloon stomping. He has learned to read from a teleprompter with the same steadiness with which I shoot basketballs after a few highballs. He garbled history by twice alluding to a beer named after "Vice President Sam Adams." (He got the name of the beer right, but 'twas John Adams who was Vice President.)

More profoundly, in railing against the "laissez-faire policies of Republican extremists" he gave us a glimpse of his and his party's Achilles heel in this decade. For "laissez-faire," which roughly translates from the French into "let it be," is at its best a doctrine that trusts our people, their goodness and intelligence, in building a better state and nation.

The countervailing view, to which Dukakis and today's Democrats are far more susceptible than Stevenson or Kennedy Democrats were a generation ago, holds that only with a constant barrage of orders by government will racism, alcohol abuse, littering, and other forms of popular mischief be quashed.

Of course, when "laissez-faire" gets turned into a religion and applied in all situations regardless of political or human circumstances, it indeed becomes "extremist." But as a political rule of thumb it is a pretty good guide by which to build a free nation, and Dukakis the meddler from on high is not Dukakis at his best.

Dukakis at his best is the Dukakis who by example and insistence sets high standards for integrity; and this convention, for all the ease with which a reporter finds anecdotal fodder for poking fun, did reflect Dukakis at his best. By contrast with the first Democratic convention I attended 20 years ago, this was a far cleaner crowd. I suppose the hacks who used to be seen at Democratic conventions would have died out without Dukakis, but there can be no doubt that the great majority of folks who follow Dukakis are a new and better-motivated breed of Democratic politician than the literally scandalous crowd that controlled the party throughout most of the fifties and sixties.

Random notes and comments jotted down as I wandered the floor:

. . . Despite all the claptrap about affirmative action there were mighty few minorities at this convention. More than there were at the Republican convention but still awfully few.

. . . The Suffolk and Middlesex County delegations had the best seats. Plymouth County was crammed in an out-of-the-way corner somewhere between Blackstone and New Braintree.

. . . Liz Gonzalez of WBZ t.v. replaced Mrs. Bruce Bolling (who was not to be seen at this convention) as the most beautiful woman in attendance. Gonzalez is also an excellent reporter, a rare t.v. journalist who takes pains to present both sides of a story.

. . . Gov. and Mrs. Dukakis are still a handsome couple, but they don't seem to relate to each other as warmly as I remember them doing in the early days of Dukakis' career. They look stiff together, like the Nixons or the no longer married Kerrys.

. . . The biggest crowd ovations were for the word "integrity," for a request for "no smoking," for a derisive crack about the Reagan Central American policy, and for a call to end nuclear power. The only boos both came in response to references to Sen. President William Bulger.

. . . Alden Raine, the highly paid Dukakis aide, was utterly ungracious and unfriendly when I tried to say hello to him. He is one of several people I remember from Dukakis' 1974 campaign who are still around who to my way of thinking have never represented the governor well. By and large those he has brought on in the second term such as John Sasso and Phil Johnston represent him far better than the original inner circle. (After the 1974 campaign Dukakis let a number of his most able and likable people, for instance Joe Grandmaison and Jack Walsh, flee. Many of the ones he kept on were creeps who made him unpopular in ways I don't think he understands even now.)

...Middlesex County D.A. Scott Harshbarger, who retained a crewcut throughout the long-haired days of the '60s and '70s, now has the styled, blow-dried look. He looks terrible.

* * * *

As reported last week, the fight between Evelyn Murphy and Gerry D'Amico for lt. governor was a fascinating story, a real news event. But before and after this one note of interest, this convention was hot, crowded, redundant, and agoraphobia-inducing. Therefore, after the D'Amico stinkbomb went off I showed once again why I am no journalist, just a train buff.

Since there were three hours left before my return train to Boston, I bought a round-trip ticket down to Hartford and spent an hour at the Wadsworth Athenaeum. While back in Springfield Joe DeNucci was duking out Maura Hennigan for Auditor, I was contemplating the differences between John Trumbull and Gilbert Stuart.

Corrections

Corrections: Last week I garbled history by referring to the Adams-Jefferson election of 1804. It was in 1800. And I garbled grammar in writing, ". . . it was a disgrace, there is no other adjective in journalism that describes it." Disgrace is not, nor has it ever been, an adjective.

The meaning of American Patriotism

To the Editor:

The other day I began to read "Politicus" by David A. Mittell (The Mariner, May 1) and I could not help sensing the ignorance of this poor man or should I say boy. Please inform him that unless the Republican delegates were actually singing "God Save the Queen" I cannot for the life of me understand that he didn't know that the band was actually playing "America" which has the same melody. Having been a Republican since reaching my majority I resent the fact that it was implied that we owe our allegiance to the Queen instead of The United States of America. I not only learned the words to "America" but the meaning of those words over sixty years ago when I attended kindergarten in the Plummer School in East Boston. I suggest that this ignorant liberal idiot, Mittel, go back to school and learn the real meaning of AMERICAN PATRIOTISM. Needless to say I shall not bother to read his articles again.

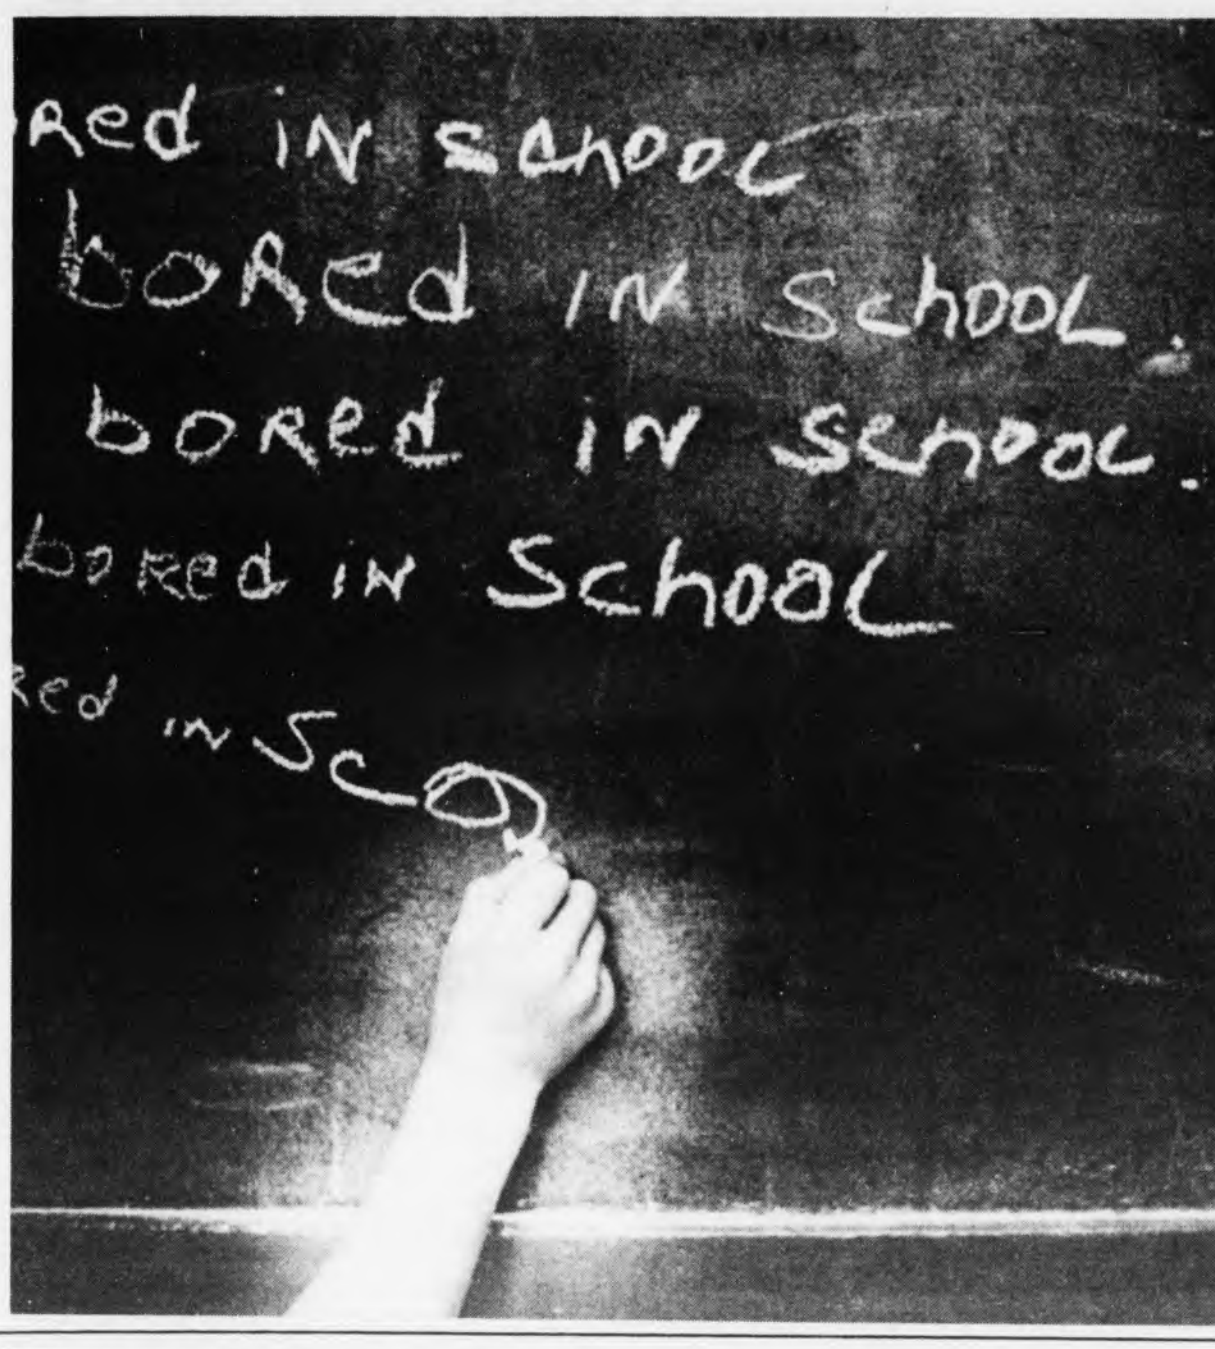
YOUR YARD'S BEST FRIEND

A Stone's Throw — by Paul Steven Stone



If only he could learn to limp

She could have been any administrator in any school system, but heaven sent her to me.

"It's my son," I said. "He has a problem."

She smiled understandingly. "Have you looked through our catalog of special programs? Just what exactly is his problem?"

"He's smarter than the other kids in his class."

Ice suddenly formed at the corners of her smile.

"We don't consider that a problem."

"You would if you were my son. He's bored, under-stimulated and losing interest in education."

"Yes, but our special programs are for children with deficiencies. If your child has a problem it's that he doesn't have deficiencies."

"But he will; don't you see. He'll start to hate school, act up, fall off his work. He'll become emotionally disturbed. . ."

"Ahh," she cried, as if the sun had broken through, "then we'll be able to help him!"

When I left, I took a catalog. For future reference.

The Dragon's Dungeon — By Claire McDonough

Taking a long, honest look at past mistakes

"I'm glad we have Memorial Day," the Dragon mused. "It gives us the impetus to draw back from our day-to-day business-as-usual agenda and take time to reflect on our roots and re-examine our goals and objectives. It's a chance to learn from past mistakes."

"You're being very serious," I told him. "What past mistakes do you intend to avoid?"

"Well, for openers," he responded, "I will never again put frozen food in the microwave unless it's on a dish. And if I should put it in without a dish and it thaws all over the place, I won't tell you about it in time for it to make your column."

"I think you just did," I said. "What else?"

He thought for a minute. "I will remind you not to lock your car keys in the trunk. Not to leave leftovers in the refrigerator so long they become 'mystery food,' then cover them with mayonnaise and try to feed them to me. Not to set the smoke detector off every time you cook hamburg. Not to set the thermostat on the air conditioner so low that the oil burner kicks in. Not to put white clothes in the same wash with red socks. Not to forget to balance your check book. Not to . . . "

"Hey, wait a minute," I objected. "Don't you have any mistakes of your own to avoid? How come all your resolutions concern dumb things I do?"

He shrugged. "What are friends for?"

I searched for a cutting rejoinder, but the best I could come up with was 'Oh, yeah?"

I glared at him.

"Look," he said reasonably, "if Memorial Day is to be meaningful, it's important that we take a long, honest look at our past errors. Certainly I'd be happy to have you point out my mistakes if there were any. However, you've already mentioned the Great Frozen Food in the Microwave Fiasco, and that seems to be it. Of course, if you should feel the need to criticize, I have no objection. Just try not to be petty."

I thought for a minute. "Well, shutting the cat in the bathroom the other night certainly was a mistake that I'd prefer you didn't repeat. Come to think of it, so was frying the dogfood because you thought it was a can of hash."

"See what I mean?" he said. "Petty."

Skip waves frantically. "Do I get to submit some mistakes that should never be repeated? Succotash is one. So is feeding your very own children liver. And I was shocked. "You're all grounded!" I shouted.

Breida sighed. "I'm nineteen, Pat is almost 24, and Larry's 22. You can't ground us any more."

"I forgot," I admitted. "But don't you have any beautiful memories—things I've told you that changed trying to tell them it's steak. And it was a big mistake for Breida to show my baby pictures to my date."

Breida sniffed. "My biggest mistake was going into your room. I got so grossed out that I couldn't eat for a week."

Her brother smiled. "Great. For a nominal fee I'll gross you out every week, and you won't have to diet or exercise any more."

"This certainly has been an insightful discussion," Patrick interjected. "Right up there with dialogue from Love Boat and Three's A Crowd. I'm beginning to think that my biggest mistake was leaving my book at work. But if we're discussing past mistakes, how about the time Ma was shortening Skip's pants and she cut the material off at the knees? Or the time she and Dad went to a wedding a week ahead of time. And ended up with their pictures in some perfect stranger's wedding album."

"Look," I told them, "why do we have to talk about mistakes. Why can't we just concentrate on things from our past we'd like to remember."

Breida thought for a moment. "I remember all the games of 'Don't tell Ma' we used to play. Like 'Jump out of Eileen's window into a snow bank, but don't tell Ma.' Larry taught us that one. And Pat took me swimming when I had stitches and I shouldn't get wet, but he told me not to tell you."

your life?"

Larry nodded. "You told me if I'm driving a car and a dog chases me, roll down the window and bark at him. It confuses him and he stops. Works every time."

I sighed. "Haven't you learned anything meaningful from any of our conversations?"

Patrick patted my hand. "Certainly. In fact, I think I'm having a learning experience right now. I've just learned that it's not wise to mouth off when your mother the columnist has a deadline looking down her throat."

Fishing: A better alternative than all-day T.V. viewing

By Mark H. Trask
Special to the Mariner

(Note: as summer vacation approaches parents may well take heed. . .)

"Mom?"

Half question, half statement. Just when things were beginning to quiet down to a dull roar she thought. Maybe he'll go away if I pretend I didn't hear him.

"Mom!"

Definitely a statement. With an audible sigh she reluctantly lay aside the bestseller which she'd been trying to read for days now. She looked at her son leaning beseechingly against the arm of her chair. He began to dawdle with the next pages of the book.

"What Ricky?"

"Mom, there's nothing to do," he whined as he proceeded to knock the novel onto the floor. I can't believe this, she thought, never a moment of peace.

"What about playing with one of your toys," she suggested gently, hopefully. As she reached over to retrive the novel in her mind's eye she saw the crowded clutter of the playroom. Surely, he'll think of one of them.

"Nawh," he expressively drawled, "I already played with all them".

"What about those new rogobots?" she tried.

No answer. He was flicking the channels of the TV now. Flick.

"...come together in the sight of the Lord. . .". Flick.

"...into the oven for just 35 minutes on. . .". Flick.

"...report increasing tensions in the Middle Ea. . .".Flick.

"...Ernie! Go to sleep." "Ok Bert. . .". Flick

"...you can't, you can't leave me alone. . .". Flick.

"Eeeyah!" the voice cackled, "Boy-o-boy its a biig one!" A buzzing whirring sound was followed by a series of splashes. Ricky slowly sank to the floor as the blond haired man on the screen struggled. His eyes widened as the man's hand swept down to the sun drenched water and pulled a wriggling fish into view.

"Mom. . .Mom! Can I go fishing? Huh Mom? Huh?"

She slowly folded over the page she'd been reading and closed the book. Ricky was animated now, looking at her and back to the TV screen. Fishing she thought as she contemplated the screen, something she'd never really considered.

Ricky is at the point which 60 million Americans have in one way or another come to know. Fishing is a universal type of recreation which appeals to all ranges of the skills in the human spectrum. From the simple plunking of a bobber and worm into a local pond, streaking a lifelike lure past a promising weedbed, or dimpling the quiet surface with a fly to cranking in deep water cod and flounder, straining against the wild leaps and runs of battlin' bluefish, and the body testing, equipment straining rigors of tuna fishing, the sport of recreational fishing provides a diverse lifetime of friends and interests.

Fishing brings a person into the outdoors and nature, closer to a world which many will never have the privilege to see.

Fishing is fun, an investment which rewards many times over. Join President Reagan in his declaration of June 2-8, 1986 as National Fishing Week. Celebrate by helping yourself and your kids to a taste of the good life of fishing.

FISH REPORT

Shad doing very well evenings and nights in the North River on small ⅛ oz. darts, trout rising to flys and savagely attacking small rooster tail/mepps type spinners in stocked streams and ponds, bass excellent in most ponds on shiners, crawlers and lures — next few weeks prime for lunkers close to shore — L. Wilson weighed in an early a.m. 5 lb. 11 oz. largemouth, pickerel, crappie, panfish more active now as the water warms on a variety of lures as well as shiners and crawlers.

Joe Tobin brought in a 4 lb. 6 oz. pickerel at Beechwood St., Cohasset dam. Flounder best spots are Hull's bayside piers and by boat, Cohasset Harbor Channel, Cowins rocks off Minot into Egypt Beach, Scituate Harbor yacht basin and jetty, mouth of South River at spit, cod improving explosively — Abbadessa boat bagged many up to 20 lbs., others reporting plenty if you can get through the mackeral jigging preferred, bluefish head to the Cape but not for long, stripers early and small in the North River (Be aware of regulations limits, and tackle limitations — It's the law!)

The best trout fishing occurs in the spring

By Bill Smith
Special to the Mariner

Trout provide spectacular sport fishing on lightweight tackle and are an excellent eating fish. There are a number of waters in our immediate area or within a short ride where anglers can challenge trout with their lures.

Many of these ponds, lakes and rivers are stocked heavily by the Division of Fisheries and Wildlife to supplement the native trout population. There are three basic types of trout available in local waters — brook trout, rainbow trout and brown trout. Although each exhibits its own individual preference, all can be caught utilizing the following techniques.

The best trout fishing occurs during the early spring, usually in April and May, depending on the weather, and then again in the fall. During these times trout are in shallow water easily accessible to anglers.

They also exhibit ferocious appetites, aggressively feeding on almost anything that moves into their reach. Contrary to some thought, trout can be caught all year long by experienced anglers who modify their techniques during the summer's warmer weather.

Anglers often ask when is the best time of day to fish for trout. Once again, the answer to this question depends upon the season and temperature. During the spring and fall, many anglers often begin fishing at dawn without much success. As the sun gets higher and begins to warm the water, action also heats up.

The reason is that environmental conditions are then more conducive for the cold blooded trout to begin feeding. Conversely, during the warmer weather of the summer, fishing is best early in the morning or in the evening.

Finding trout lays, those areas in which trout settle and remain, will also depend upon the time of year, and temperatures of the water, and the water conditions. Often times, anglers over-fish their intended targets making very long casts to the middle of the pond or stream.

It must be remembered that big fish often come into the shallows to feed on the insects which fall from the banks. Unlike other freshwater gamefish, trout are often lazy and content to remain in one specific location waiting for their meal to come to them rather than cruising long stretches of water seeking food. Watch for cutaways in banks, mouths of streams, submerged rocks or trees which provide excellent lays for trout.

Trout can be caught on a wide variety of lures and natural baits. Live bait, such as salmon eggs, worms, shrimp and minnows allowed to drift along the bottom, are deadly. The key to success with live bait is to present the bait in as natural a way as not to scare the fish and to arouse their curiosity.

Although bait fishing is very effective, lures can at times produce more consistent action. To an inexperienced angler, selecting the appropriate trout lure can become a very difficult and frustrating task. Trout are attracted to a number of kinds of lures, but the basic secret of lure fishing is to fish the lure at the appropriate depth and with the appropriate action.

In the early spring, I use small wobbling spoons which I allow to sink before I begin to retrieve in an erratic manner. Such a retrieve will cause the lure to dart up and dive down attracting the trout's attention. Color is controversial but hammered copper or brightly colored lures have worked best for me.

Another effective type of lure for spring fishing is the spinner which gets its name from the spinner blade. Cast these lures into deep pockets of water and allow them to settle before retrieving. A slow retrieve produces best results. As the water warms, more and more trout will be caught while trolling sinking plugs and large spoons.

Many trout are lost through careless attention and poor techniques. Often times, trout, which are unpredictable, will charge at the angler or perform acrobatic jumps just after hook up. Anglers must put enough pressure on the fish with the reel's drag and rod action until he tires the fish out and can land him. Don't be in too much of a hurry!

I have pursued trout from the most remote areas of the far north to small streams beside busy urban highways. Often, I utilize my fly rod which is probably the most exciting way to catch trout. This is somewhat of a difficult and confusing subject. It will be the topic of our next column.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

Never part with a long, forgot ten cookbook

Spring cleaning can be a mixed bag, wherein you unearth the long forgotten—a box of old snapshots, magazines tucked away because there was a certain story you hoped to read when you had a minute, toys gathering dust and old recipes you had been meaning to try.

It takes a lot of self-discipline not to linger misty-eyed over the photos, to throw out the toys that are just taking up space now and to part with the magazines as yet unread. But part with a cook book? Never!

The rumpled one I rescued from the back of my desk drawer was compiled by the food and nutrition committee of the Plymouth-Kingston League of Women Voters and has an entire page devoted to ways of preparing my husband's favorite food—Spam! Here are some suggestions for using this luncheon meat: chop and scramble in with eggs; slice, brown on both sides and serve with eggs; cut in strips and use in a tossed salad with cheese; place slices on top of beans and bake and this

EASY PORK CASSEROLE

Brown canned pork in butter. Season with salt and pepper. Sprinkle chopped onions and peppers on top. Pour a can of condensed tomato soup over all. Cover and simmer one hour.

Sometimes when I see high school girls wearing ankle sox, padded shoulders and ankle-length pleated skirts, I think I should have saved my high school wardrobe, for we've come full circle and I'd be right back in style. However, in the interests of space, I've always gone by the rule that when cleaning closets, anything I haven't worn in the past year has to go.

From reading the New York Times, it would seem that styles in eating change as well and their suggested simple summer luncheon a la provencale would include: fresh sardines in vine leaves, lambs' tripes a la marseillaise, or pike dumplings a la Lyonnaise. Much more to my family's liking are these simple old standbys sent in by Grade IV parents for a cookbook of Menu Delights at Marshfield's South River School.

It, too, was unearthed one rainy day while I was cleaning out drawers and has mimeographed recipes such as Mrs. Drumgool's Chili, Alice MacPhail's Boy Scout Dinner, Kathleen Champagne's House of Lord Burgers and this recipe of Mrs. Jordan's which my sons could never have enough of when it was served in the school cafeteria.

AMERICAN CHOP SUEY

1 large can each tomatoes and puree
1 large onion
3 slices bacon
1/4 tsp. salt
1 clove garlic (crushed)
2 slices American cheese
1 c. water
1 lb. ground beef

Cook bacon and set aside. Cook ground beef in small bits in skillet in bacon fat. Set meat aside. Saute onion and garlic until tender. While doing above, bring tomatoes and puree to boil, mashing tomatoes with fork into small bits. Add bacon, beef, onions, water, salt and cheese to tomatoes. Cook slowly 2 to 3 hours. Refrigerate overnight. Serve over elbow macaroni.

* * *

As an introduction to the school cookbook, Mrs. McCarthy gave this very special recipe for the summer vacation:

Take one large, grassy field
One-half dozen children—two or three small dogs,
A pinch of brook and some pebbles.

Mix children and dogs well together and put them in the field.

Pour the brook over the pebbles and sprinkle the field with flowers.

Spread over all a deep blue sky and bake in the hot sun.

When brown, remove and set away to cool . . . in a bathtub!

And here is another of their recipes which can be stashed away in the freezer, ready for summer company.

HOT CHEESE PUFFS

Beat 1/2 c. butter (or oleo) until creamy
Beat 2 c. shredded cheddar cheese into butter in blender
Measure 1 c. flour and resift with 1/8 tsp. paprika and 1/8 tsp. salt
Blend dry ingredients into cheese mixture.
Shape into 1" balls. Place on baking sheet. Bake at 350 degrees for 15 min. approx. until puffed and brown.

Tears follow Mr. Di's decision to leave CHS

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Despite the preparations being made for graduation, there was little joy at Cohasset High School this week.

Following assistant principal Gino DiGirolamo's resignation, came the shock of acceptance by teachers, staff members and students. Tears flowed in the privacy of offices, along the school corridors and in silent groups as students walked to class.

Mr. Di, a part of Cohasset High School for 27 years, will be leaving the end of the month. His retirement came in the form of a letter to the superintendent Monday morning. It was accepted "with deep regret" by a school committee informed he would not reconsider his decision.

Mr. Di, known by two generations of students as a coach, teacher and compassionate administrator, has accepted a teaching position in a private school.

"It's something I should have done a long time ago," he said this week in his high school office, acknowledging he has missed the time spent away from the classroom.

He was chairman of the math department at the high school when former superintendent William Ripley asked him to take the assistant principal's

Architect's rendering of town hall addition.

Town hall addition = $900,000

Plans have been prepared for an addition to the town hall which will provide handicapped access throughout the building and additional office and meeting room space.

In the plans presented by architect Brett Donham to selectmen Monday night, all town offices with the exception of the highway and water departments, will be located within the Highland Avenue buiding. Donham estimated the construction costs of the addition will total $900,000.

The plans which will keep the town hall auditorium intact, will be presented to the public at an information meeting June 12. Two years ago, preliminary discussions about a town hall addition included the elimination of the town hall stage to accommodate more office space. A flurry of protests against that suggestion forced the town hall study committee to develop new plans for an addition. The public is urged to attend the June 12 meeting.

Selectmen approved the plans Monday night,

These graduates are individuals

This is the class others have labeled "the rebels." The graduating students of 1986 dislike that title.

"We are individuals, unique," argued student council president Bobby Corkery. His fellow class officers agree.

"There are no cliques in this class. We are all close friends," secretary Ginni Nussdorfer stated.

"I love this class," she continued. "I don't want to graduate."

As Sunday's ceremonies approach, the senior class of Cohasset High School senses a mixture of emotions. They are sad, relieved, anxious, excited, and apprehensive.

Nussdorfer is headed to the University of New Hampshire where she will major in English. "There's a lot of potential in this class," she added. "We did not make every effort to excel in academics. We had a lot of fun. We'll probably be known more for the fun we had than our schoolwork."

Nussdorfer will especially remember the parties "usually down the beach or at someone's house."

The class secretary said the class was nicknamed "the rebels" by undergraduates. The label was created when the class defied tradition and failed to produce a senior class play.

Police, town agree to 2-year pact

A two-year contract was tentatively approved last week by the town and the police union, ending two years of tough negotiations.

The terms of the contract have not been released. Attorneys for the town and the union are completing final contract language. Union president David Pomarico expects the two-year contract will be signed this week. A majority of union members voted this week to accept the contract.

Members of the personnel board met last week with union representatives and the state Joint Management Labor Committee (JMLC). The two sides negotiated more than 800 days, the state mediator told Officer Pomarico.

"Personally, I'm pleased with the contract, weighing all things equally," he said this week. "It was a fair offer by the town."

The new contract will begin July 1 and conclude July 1, 1988. Town meeting voted in April to implement a unilateral five percent salary increase for the union, retroactive to 1984 and terminating July 1, 1986. Although the union disapproved of the unilateral increase, the vote of town meeting authorized the settlement.

Officer Pomarico credited the town's attorney, Robert Garrett, with salvaging the negotiations. "He came in late in the game as the town's attorney, but he really made the town aware of what the situation really was," the union president explained.

Officer Pomarico said the new contract brings the Cohasset Police Association members in parity with other area departments.

"The big issue was money, right from the start," he said. "This new contract will put us in line with the other departments, and that's what we wanted from the start."

The base pay in the Norwell and Hull police departments is currently between $23,000 and $24,000. During the past two years of negotiations, the town refused to hike the salaries to that level, Pomarico said. The state JMLC interceded in the Merchants prepare for possible movie make-up

Through the magic of Hollywood, Cohasset Village may soon undergo a complete facelift.

Although there is still no official word, residents and merchants seem assured the movies are coming to Cohasset.

While Hollywood has yet to give the go-ahead, most residents feel "The Witches of Eastwick" will make an appearance this summer in Cohasset.

Samuel Mercer, location manager for Warner Brothers, has toured Cohasset several times in the past few weeks. In his conversations with local merchants it seems almost certain Cohasset will be part of the scenery for the upcoming feature film.

Mercer and his film crews have scoured every corner of Cohasset Village. Although the Massachusetts Film Bureau and Warner Brothers have yet to make the formal announcement, merchants believe their properties will be featured in the movie this summer.

Chamber of Commerce president Wayne Sawchuk said he talked with Mercer in Cohasset last Saturday. "They're holding off on making any firm arrangements. But my feeling is that they're definitely going to do some filming in Cohasset and probably elsewhere in the state."

The local businessman said Mercer has been very cautious about affirming Cohasset as a location site. "I assume that until every detail is sewed up, they can't say with certainly where the film will be made," he added.

"I'll be surprised if they don't come to Cohasset, though," Sawchuk stated. "They've spent a reasonable amount of time in town talking with town officials and merchants. Everybody associated with the Chamber has been cooperative."

In their conversations with Village merchants, film executives discussed the planned conversion of Cohasset into a fictional setting

Cohasset's week . . .

Tri-town discussions

Selectmen agreed Monday to support the rejuvenation of the tri-town committee with Hull and Hingham.

Hull selectman John Silva attended Monday night's selectmen meeting to discuss the proposal. With such common concerns as solid waste disposal, transportation and sewage treatment, Silva said a committee of this type would give the three towns "a coalition within a (South Shore) Coalition. This would give our three towns a bit of clout," he stated.

Although selectmen last year approved the concept of a tri-town committee, no meetings were ever scheduled. They expressed concern that if the committee was reactivated, there should be a push to set a meeting time.

Selectmen approved the reactivation of the committee, and reappointed Diane Sullivan to serve on the tri-town group.

Plotting to die?

If you're plotting to die later than two years from now, you might have a hard time finding a local resting place.

Don Andrew, Executive Secretary to the selectmen, said Tuesday there are only about two years worth of space presently available in Cohasset's cemeteries.

"The Board of Selectmen is reactivating a cemetery needs committee and is asking for volunteers," Andrew added.

"We would like to have a committee studying the problem within a month," he said, "but things move slowly in the summer."

Andrew indicated Town land should be available for graveyard expansion, but he said he couldn't elaborate.

Peter Laugelle, Superintendent of Cemeteries for the Town of Cohasset, refused to discuss the grave situation.

Who is this man? Can anyone give some biographical information?

Central Cemetery, which is privately owned and operated, is packed to capacity according to David Wadsworth, a member of the Board of Directors of the Central Cemetery Association.

"They made quite a search a few years ago," he said, "to see if they could find any land within the cemetery that wasn't already owned by one family or another.

"They did find a few plots they could create," he said, "but I believe those all now have been sold."

He added, "They do have one of the few columbariums. It's a new granite structure with compartments in it, niches for cremation urns.

"That was built just a few years ago," he said. "So they're still able to sell the niches in the columbarium, but as far as plot spaces go, I think they've exhausted the land they now have."

Roosters now charged

Selectmen decided Monday night mooring roosters will now be charged a daily fee of $15.

Roosters are boaters who tie up at empty mooring sites in the harbor on a daily basis. They switch from mooring to mooring without having to pay the annual mooring fee.

A long line at the till for Special Town Meeting

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Times ahead will be tough on the big spenders the Advisory Board and Cohasset's new Town Accountant Jo Ann Whittemore concluded Tuesday night.

There are just three short weeks until Cohasset holds a special Town Meeting, but there is already too long a line at the till.

"There is only $140,063 available June 23 for fiscal year 1987," Whittemore told the board, "but there was a total of $186,914 requested. We're just going to have to tell them, if you don't have the cash, you can't do it."

"We should put that in big neon letters on the front of the Town Hall," quipped board member Jill O'Donnell.

Some of the larger budget requests are: Police -$45,700; combined legal fees for FY 86 - $30,000; treasurer fees - $20,000; Computer - $19,500; and Caleb Marsh, a personnel consultant company -$14,000.

"Our deliberations will have to be based on the bottom line," O'Donnell said. "We're going to reach a point where that's it; it's time to quit."

She suggested setting up a big chalkboard at the special Town Meeting and keeping track of the Town's available bankroll.

The board noted that after last year's surplus, a $46,851 deficit may come as a shock to local fund seekers.

Last year, the Town had $115,655 available, but faced only $97,992 worth of requests. The result was a glut of $17,663.

"We've got to stress at Town Meeting, that last year was a fluke of free cash," board chairman Fred Koed said.

Whittemore told the board of troubles in Bridgewater, where she once worked.

"At Town Meeting in Bridgewater," she said, "when the Advisory Board told the people there was no more money, they didn't believe it and kept voting in more and more items. Now, they're in trouble."

Among the big ticket items that will have townspeople piping, are the impending sewerage solution schemes.

R. Murray Campbell of Old Pasture Road, asked the board to reconsider the Town's sewer options by springing for further study of the problem.

"The sentiment of the town has changed," he said, "not to the M&E plan per se, but because of the growing dislike of the Hull connection and the dislike of the two-inch pipes by people who would have to be connected to them."

He added, "We need to know what other alternatives there are, because the Hull connection may fall through."

Campbell explained, "The Hull Board of Selectmen voted against the idea, and although there have been personnel changes on the Hull Board of Selectmen, I can't believe Hull would sell 1/6 of its sewer capacity for $114,000, which is the number the sewer commission is kicking around."

He claimed the State is saying it supports the Hull connection "because they want us to do something. That doesn't mean it's right for us."

He explained, the current plan is limited to 300,000 gallons per day, while the earlier plan included the Ledgewood area and Route 3A.

Campbell assailed the idea of going with the cheapest possible plan and suggested that later problems with on-site systems and with a private sewer system on Route 3A, should be avoided by solving all the problems now.

"Sometimes it's better to replace a roof, than to keep fixing it," he said.

Speaking of roofs, architect Brett Donham and the Historical District Commission presented plans for an addition to Town Hall.

The $900,300 price tag nearly raised the roof.

"That cost surprised us," board member Bill Lean told the commissioners. "It's conceptually appealing, but that price tag is tough."

Board member Arnie Gjesteby questioned the need for expansion. "What will be the benefit to the taxpayers?" he asked.

Donham explained, "There will be an increase in productivity because departments which do a lot of business with each other won't be split between two buildings.

"Also," he said, "the addition will provide access for the handicapped.

"Figure in a 5 percent annual inflation rate," he added, "It won't get any cheaper."

Seniors Task Force formed

U.S. Rep. Gerry E. Studds (D-MA) is planning to form a Tenth Congressional District Senior Citizens Task Force.

Tenth District residents are invited to express interest in participating in the Task Force by contacting any of his offices in Hanover, Hyannis or New Bedford. He said the full membership of the Task Force would be announced soon.

Two opponents attend committee rail meeting

In sharp contrast to a similar meeting held last week in Hingham, there were no crowds or shouts of protest greeting consultants reviewing the restoration of the Old Colony Greenbush commuter rail line.

Only two residents who attended Monday night's meeting expressed oppositionto the restoration of the railroad. Ron Northman of 347 North Main Street objected to the revitalization of the railroad which was last activated in the late 1950's. A new resident, Northman said the commuter rail line if restored in the same location, is only about 20 feet from the back of his home near Rosano Lane.

Northman questioned project consultant Stephen Polechronis whether the commuter line may also be used in the future for freight trains. The consultant, who is working on a study which will be completed for the MBTA in September, 1987, answered, "I can't predict whether any freight trains will run on the line. The potential is there." He noted if federal money is used to fund the railroad, the state can not preclude freight trains from using the commuter line.

According to Polechronis, a preliminary study indicates a potential ridership of 4200 one-way on the Greenbush line each day. "There's a tremendous potential there to ease the strain on the expressway," he stated.

The initial sites considered for park-and-ride stations within Cohasset include about two to three acres of land on Rte. 3A near the Cohasset Winter Gardens skating rink. "This site would minimize traffic onto streets within the town," Polechronis observed. "But there are wetlands there, so we know this location needs further study."

The second location suggested for a station is the Music Circus parking area. Noting an agreement would have to be worked out with the ownership of the Music Circus, Polechronis said the location could be used because there is minimal use of the theatre during the day.

Selectmen James Gallagher objected to the site, saying there would be too much traffic generated near the elementary school and the town's swimming pool on Sohier Street.

A third possible station site may be to reactivate the Cohasset Village station. It would not be used as a parking area, but as a "kiss-and-ride" station, where commuters would be dropped off or they could walk to the station.

"What does the town plan to do about property damage?" Northman asked, referring to the potential loss of property value because of the nearby rail line.

"To my knowledge, the town has never compensated anyone for a loss in property value," Laugelle stated.

Selectman Diane Sullivan explained last May a referendum was given Cohasset voters, in which a 7-1 majority favored the return of the Old Colony Greenbush line. "I personally feel we are elected to carry out the will of the voters," she stated.

Architect proposes $900,000 town hall wing which now must be reviewed by the capital outlay committee and the advisory committee before it is brought before the June 23 town meeting for appropriations.

The two-story addition will be built lower than the existing building, Donham explained, for visual and cost reasons. There will be a front entrance to the addition with an overhanging roof to give it a porch effect. The addition, which will be sided in white clapboards, resembles a "typical New England Cape-style building," Donham explained.

The town hall addition will include handicapped access and an elevator located about 35 feet from the entrance. The elevator will service the first and second floor of the addition and the third floor of the existing building where the planning board, building inspector, board of health, and assessors offices will be located.

The second floor of the addition will include the selectmen's office, the accountant's area, a staff lounge which will double as a meeting room, the town vault and the elevator. The current selectmen's and executive secretary's office will be converted into a meeting room, he explained.

There will be a full basement for storage of town records and files. When asked by selectman Mary Jane McArthur if there was room for an additional meeting room there, Donham replied it could be constructed within that total price estimate. McArthur also inquired whether the foyer floor in the present building could be renovated. Donham suggested there are low cost ways to repair the area.

The town hall study committee along with the architect, have talked to department heads and discussed their needs within the renovated town hall. These same people will be asked to comment on the plans presented to selectmen Monday night, Donham stated. He said changes will be made, as long as they do not add substantial costs onto the project.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle asked the architect to change the front paved portion of the existing building and have landscaping there. By changing the front entrance area, it would eliminate parking in front of the building which is a hazard to people exiting town hall, he and selectman McArthur agreed.

The plans presented to selectmen called for the same number of parking spaces in the Highland Avenue lot through the use of perpendicular parking.

Donham explained there will be two meeting rooms on the ground floor of the town hall and one in the addition. The second floor lounge can be converted to a meeting room by town boards, and the selectmen's room can be used for meetings. "Effectively you will have four meeting rooms," he stated, noting a basement meeting room could be added to the original plans.

Donham suggested the town purchase a new state-regulated type of vault for important town records in the town clerk's office, and a less expensive vault can be located elsewhere in the building.

There will be new front doors installed on the existing building, he noted. Bathrooms will be constructed in the addition, and walls between offices will be opened to give the new offices needed space.

The architect said the plans will be presented to the historical district commission, the building inspector, the fire department and the board of health for their approval. Town meeting must approve costs for construction. The addition will cost about $700,000, Donham predicted. With the additional costs of a clerk of the works and engineering tests, the total reaches about$900,000, he estimated.

HELP FOR HOUSE HUNTERS

Finding a good Realtor that you like and trust is the first step in finding your new home.

You can call or stop by a company in your area. Ask to talk to the manager, and explain what type of home you're looking for. He or she can then refer you to an agent who knows that market very well and with whom you could work comfortably. You might also use weekend open houses as a chance to look for an agent as well as a new home. It's really a matter of chemistry! If you meet someone you like and who seems knowledgable, call him back.

Once you establish a good working relationship with a Realtor, he can show you almost all of the homes for sale in the area where you want to purchase, even if they're listed with other companies or for sale by owner. He will be able to show you property as soon as it is placed on the market (many of the best homes never even make it to the Sunday classified section of the newspaper).

If there's a move in your future, call the professionals at HOME CENTER REALTY. Our number is 749-8833, or just drop by our offices at 57 Water St., Hingham. We are happy to serve all of your real estate needs.

Tears, sadness fill CHS following retirement position. "He promised I could teach, too," Mr. Di. said. "That was in 1970. Things are different now. It's been a battle trying to get to teach one class."

Mr. Di was CHS principal in 1972 and the following year. Richard Streeter won the position after a lengthy appeal process. Mr. Di was named assistant principal in 1974.

This year, after the death of Charles Davis in October, Mr. Di was given one class to teach. He has instructed the pre-calculus class since November.

"I've always wanted to teach," he said. "I really enjoy it. I can't understand why someone can't teach at least one class and be an administrator. I'm not saying I'm the best, but they take some of the best teachers and move them out of the classroom and into offices . . ."

During his recent interview for the position of CHS principal, Mr. Di let it be known he wanted to continue teaching one math class. In fact, he added that after the first few years, the principal should be able to administer, teach and coach a team.

"I knew they wouldn't go for that," he stated. "They don't understand that unless you're in contact with the kids, that you see them in a class, you'll never see them. You won't know the kids in your own school."

That is incomprehensible to Mr. Di, a man who knows just about every face in the building. He stalks the corridors for conversations. Students seek his advice in the privacy of his office.

"Everyone loves Mr. Di." That is the comment heard throughout the school where his own six children attended class. His son, Phillip Mahoney, is a junior and will be student council president next year.

Pam Ellis, a member of the graduating class, heard the news of Mr. Di's retirement and reacted strongly.

"I'll miss him," she said. "We love him. A lot of the parents think he might have been easy with us, but he wasn't. He's strict. But you get the feeling he really cares. He comes across as more than a disciplinarian. He listens to you, he wants to know what happened. And he'll make exceptions.

"Mr. Di knows everyone," she continued. "It's unusual that everyone feels so strongly about him. It's too bad he didn't get the job (principal), but maybe we're better off because he'd be in the office all the time."

Gino DiGirolamo

Senior class president Sandra Best was saddened by the news of Mr. Di's departure.

"It's a great loss for Cohasset High School," she said. "Mr. Di was the person who held the school together. He is a disciplinarian and a friend. He was a coach and an advisor.

"All the students had to interact with Mr. Di to get anything done. We always teased him about being so mean, but he never was."

Realizing that many new faces and philosophies will affect the 1987 seniors, Best noted, "maybe it's good that we're graduating before all these changes take place. Next year will be a year of great change for Cohasset High School."

Mr. Di will be returning to the classroom, but not at the familiar setting of Cohasset High School. He has been hired as a math teacher in a private school.

"I see myself as a teacher. It's very important that I continue to teach, to keep in contact with the students," he noted.

His popularity soared through the years as his reputation was earned as a "listener."

"It's very important to listen to kids," he said. "They want to talk to you and they want you to listen. If you like kids, it's very easy to listen to them. And I enjoy that very much. The kids here are a great bunch. I've been seeing them for 20 years - I better like them!"

Mr. Di is not only administrator and teacher. He is an enthusiastic athletic coach who has supervised football, basketball, hockey and field hockey squads. "I was asked by the school committee to take over the girls field hockey a couple of years ago," he said, predicting a championship for next year's team.

"I'm happy about my new position," Mr. Di stated. "But it's a sad time. With graduation this week, I feel very sad about it."

Mr. Di thought about transferring to private education many years ago. He surveyed a number of prestigious schools and discovered the teachers and headmasters teach and coach. "That was my goal, my philosophy. I don't really know why I stayed here where the philosophy is so different," he said.

"Even if I had been given the job of principal (at CHS) I never would have taken it if I couldn't teach or coach," he said with determination.

The assistant principal shrugged his shoulders. With hands in the air he said, "this was one of the hardest decisions, the hardest times of my life. I'm really going to miss the kids, the students. That's what this school is all about."

School Committee reacts to citizens' petition

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The School Committee Wednesday convened early to hear petitioners' protests concerning the disclusion from final consideration of Assistant Principal Gino DiGirolamo for the vacant principal's post at Cohasset High School.

Doris Golden, a former School Committee member, submitted about a thousand signatures of Cohasset people protesting a search committee's decision not to include DiGirolamo among the three finalists, which the committee interviewed later that night.

DiGirolamo, who has served the school system for 28 years, was one of 13 original candidates who applied for the principal's position, which was opened when Richard Streeter ascended to the assistant superintendent's post.

"I think if Mr. Di were even one of the finalists, maybe that could have been accepted," Golden told the committee, "but not to have him be even one of the three finalists, I just find that so hard to accept.

"I just don't understand," she added, "why in this town, when people try to get ahead, . . . they're shot down before they get to that top rung."

Golden asked, "Why do we have to go to Hingham, to Methuen, to Texas and bring someone back here who is not familiar with our town and who does not know our children, when we have someone right under our own nose?

"I just can't understand," she said, "why any of you cannot see it in your heart to put someone in our school as principal, who has worked so hard for our children and who loves our kids as Mr. Di does."

Committee Chairman Joseph Nedrow explained how the finalists were chosen.

"I was fortunate enough to be involved in the selection of Commissioner of Education for the commonwealth," he said. "The model they used was to have a broad representation of different people in the commonwealth.

"I was so impressed with the process," he added, "I came back to the committee and said I really thought that was kind of a neat idea, to get this broad community input.

"What we did," he explained, "was use that as a model. We advertised in the newspaper for a couple weeks to try to get as many representatives of the community interested in making this decision as we could, and we expanded the search committee to include every citizen that expressed an interest to us to be part of this process."

Nedrow said forty volunteers were formed into four groups of 10. These four groups "gave up two very nice Saturdays in the last month" and interviewed all the candidates.

"We started out with a broad sample (of candidates)," he explained, "because we had been given input from the community that we ought to be broader in terms of the type of candidates that we look at, even in terms of our teaching.

"In the last couple of years," he said, "we have expanded in terms of advertising for teachers and we've gotten some very good candidates."

Nedrow added, "The way we put the model together was in fact, biased toward all the internal candidates, because we said to the administration in terms of the initial screening, that every internal candidate would go before a citizens' search selection committee.

"So, every internal candidate had that benefit," he said, "and what came out of these four groups, was three candidates."

The finalists were: Mary Ellen Gallagher, an Assistant Principal at Hingham High School; Robert Jarvis, Principal of Methuen High School; and Tom Davis, Principal of Westbury High School in Houston, Texas.

"All the candidates that were interviewed were outstanding," Nedrow said, "and all of them would probably do an excellent job, but we wanted to get what the community felt was the very, very strongest candidate for the job.

He explained, the four groups were consistent in their choices of the three finalists.

Golden objected.

"I would like to see you pick a candidate that holds a candle to Mr. Di'squalifications,"she said. "I don't care if they have a phD. after their name, they cannot hold a candle to the integrity Mr.Di has and the love he has for our children, which to me is more important than any degree on anyone that you're going to hire."

She assailed the School Committee's new principal-picking procedure.

"I guess my point is that you had nothing to do with it," she scolded the board. "You were elected by the people in this town to do that job. To me, this is one of the most important things that a School Committee member is elected to do."

She charged, "Obviously, you didn't think this way when you were looking for a superintendent or assistant superintendent."

"The committee decided that it would try to get community support," Nedrow said. "Some of the people that served on those committees had as much time attending school board meetings as any of us.

"I think it's regrettable that we didn't have you on one of those committees," he added.

"I figured you'd think I was biased if I was," she said.

"No, no," he replied, "I wouldn't care. It would have been another representation. We had people on committees that came in with the sole purpose of promoting a candidate. I had people call me unsolicited and say, 'I really went to that with a certain bias.'" Committee member Diana Kornet added;"There's not one person sitting at this table who doesn't cherish Mr. Di for everything he's done here. Give us credit for looking at a little bigger picture.

"We wanted to give our three internal applicants the best shot and catapulted them ahead of the others," she added.

"This was an opportunity to get some fresh ideas into the system. It would be wrong to move people up the chess board just because they've been here for a long time."

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Kevin M. Neill, Chiropractic Physician

JOINT DEGENERATION

As a disc compresses, it loses its spring. As a result, joints lose the cushion between bones and begin to grind together and wear down. The openings in the vertebrae can then narrow and pinch the nerves. Bone spurs can develop. A patient may experience pain, stiffness, a feeling of "sand in the joints," muscle tension headache and nagging neck aches that often are worse in the morning. Joint degeneration is due to osteoarthritis, the breakdown of cartilage inside the joints. It is caused by years of wear and tear or from an old injury. Left untreated, joint problems can begin to affect the nerves and spinal cord. Chiropractic treatment strives to relieve pain, separate compressed joints and restore neck alignment.

More and more people are discovering relief from problems that they assumed they must live with forever. For a professional exam and evaluation of your particular situation, we welcome your call at the COHASSET CHIROPRACTIC OFFICE, 760 Chief Justice Cushing Hwy., Suite 12. We offer a thorough exam based upon which we will describe the chiropractic applications that can serve your needs and provide the relief you seek. Call today and enjoy the growing list of clients who have come to appreciate the benefits of periodic chiropractic exams. We provide chiropractic care for the entire family. School Committee stays with search group decision

Alfred Odermatt, of 2 Todd Lane told the committee, "I'm a little embarrassed, being a resident of the town, that the overall situation has been handled the way it has been. I can't see the justification.

"I'm trying to see what justification there would be," he added,"in deciding that you could select a superintendent without competition, select an assistant superintendent without competition, then deciding to cut, whom I feel is one of the finest men this school system ever had in it, and saying we must have competition for his jump."

He added, "This is not going to be an acceptable decision, no matter how capable the person is. It's not going to be a popular decision and it's really going to hurt the town."

Nedrow explained that candidates for the principal's position were judged by different criteria than were the candidates for superintendent and assistant superintendent because of "the kind of direction we were getting in terms of community input as to the type of person that we wanted to be high school principal."

"That would make you feel then," Odermatt asked, "that this committee is perfectly satisfied that they had a capable person to be superintendent?"

"Exactly," Nedrow replied.

"That it had a capable person to be assistant superintendent?"

"Exactly."

"But the committee decided it was questionable whether the man who was assistant principal would be the next principal?"

"That's right."

Kornet interjected, "I think it is extremely unfortunate that it has come to this point right here, because it is just heart-sickening for us."

"Well you know," Golden retorted, "if it's that heart-sickening for you, you know a School Committee can override a search committee."

"We've made an educational decision," Kornet said, "which we are convinced is the right one, and set in process a certain set of circumstances. We certainly are going to stick by it."

She added, "I am so sad for the position that you are putting Mr. Di in,though I know it's well-meaning.

Nedrow did not dispute DiGirolamo's record, but explained, "It's like putting together a basketball team; you wouldn't have all centers. You try to put together a team that's going to complement each other.

"We're trying to build an administrative team that's going to continue the tradition," he said. "We just felt we didn't need the third center."

The winning poster for the South Shore Art Center's summer festival is displayed by artist Diane Pasiuk of Peabody. Director Margaret Dillon (l) stands with second prize winner Joanna Hudgens, and third prize winner Susan Buckley of Cohasset. Joni Jensen of the Art Center participated in the awards ceremony. (Eric Frances)

☐ An honor has been bestowed on a former Cohassetite, and it is certainly worthy of everyone knowing, whether she wins or not! We all know the Lincoln family of Cohasset. . . well, one member, Priscilla Lincoln Trush, is living in Seattle, Washington, where she is a teacher of special education children. She has taught for 24 years at the Greenlake Elementary School, and this year is a special one indeed. Priscilla has been nominated for teacher of the year, and the announcement will be made on June 7. I'm sure she feels like a true winner already, as she was nominated due to letters sent by students and fellow teachers and all involved with her work. Mrs. Trush has 30 students, and I'll bet everyone of them is cheering her on right now, as are we all! I'm sure we'll hear the results; in the meantime, congratulations to you!

☐ John Rattenbury, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rattenbury of Briarwood Lane, certainly had a banner year at Rensselaer Polytech Institute this year He made the Dean's List for the second semester with a 3.89 average in the Engineering course. John is currently in Pearl Harbor as part of the Navy R.O.T.C. Summer Training Program. he is aboard the USS Cavalla, a nuclear Fast Attack submarine.

☐ June 2 was a special day for Bill and Dot Parmenter, who celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary on that day. Congratulations, we hope the celebration was a happy one . . .

☐ The next Cohasset Community Triannual Red Cross Bloodmobile will be held on Monday, June 16 from 2:30-7:30 p.m. at the Unitarian First Parish House, 23 No. Main Street. Ninety-eight donors participated in the last Bloodmobile held in January, and it is hoped that 125 will participate in this one (the churches, businesses and organizations that participate in this drive will be contacting potential donors for appointments in the coming week, so be prepared to say you'll be one of the donors). If you need any further information, call Al Odermatt, Chairman, at 383-1283.

☐ Here's hoping that Isabelle Wilson is making a speedy recovery, She is a patient at South Shore Hospital.

☐ As everyone knows, this Sunday is gradution, and we want to wish the Class of 1986 every success. Something that you may not know is that it is the end of another era in Cohasset . . . the last of two families that have been very involved in the sports at CHS, as well as helping wherever they are able, are at an end at CHS. Jamie Roy, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Roy of Old Coach Road, and John Hall, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bob Hall, both followed family traditions and were outstanding members of the class. Its hard to imagine a game or event without them there. Here's hoping their families, who are ardent supporters, will be there anyway, with their continued good work!! And, best of luck to Jamie and John. I'm sure we will hear more about you two in the years to come!

☐ Susan Roy should be pleased with herself. She was a first prize winner in the Patriot Ledger Summer cookbook Contest. Her chicken salad recipe sounds delicious. We can't wait to try it!

☐ Phil Mahoney, Nancy Lincoln, Mary McElroy and Eric Maki, had a memorable experience recently. They visited our Representative Mary Jeanette Murray at the State House, and received an orientation program explaining the right to petition and the process of legislation. They also attended committee hearings and Legislative Sessions in the House and Senate. Rep. Murray started the student state government program with her high school constituents during her first session ten years ago, and it sure is a success.

☐ Congratulations to John P. Giuggio, who has been promoted to a top position at the Globe Newspaper Company, publisher of the Boston Globe. Mr. Giuggio has been the President of the Globe since 1981, and was named Globe vice chairman, He remains president and chief operating officer of Affiliated Publications, Inc., the Globe's parent company.

☐ Peter C. Donovan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Richard E. Donovan of 61 Deep Run received the Hood Achievement Prize at the May 24 University of New Hampshire graduation. Peter graduated from Boston College High School in 1982.

☐ Michael H. Nedrow was awarded a Bachelor of Science degree in Business with a major in marketing at the University of Vermont.

A resident of Cohasset he is the son of Joe and Ruth Nedrow of 21 Fairoaks Lane.

☐ We want to wish Domenic Campedelli every success on his latest venture . . . Dom is getting married! Seems like it was yesterday he was leading CHS to victory after victory in hockey, doesn't it?

☐ Peter Fahey and Rebecca Tosca are happy with their awards for the posters they created for the South Shore Bank! Peter won a $25 bond and Rebecca won a telescope. To make it even nicer, their posters were sealed in a time capsule, to be opened in 50 years. What a good idea!

☐ Congratulations and welcome to baby boy Christopher. He's the brand new son of CHS teacher Bryan Marks and his wife, Sandra. Christopher was born Sunday, June 1.

☐ That's the news from here, anything new with you? If so, report it!

Editorial

Don't forget

It's been a tough week.

This week marks a time of departure for the students, faculty and staff of Cohasset High School.

The class of 1986 will graduate Sunday, leaving the familiar corridors of high school for the dormitories of distant colleges, or the offices of corporations.

It is for them a time of sadness, anticipation and change.

There are changes facing the Cohasset school system as well. There will be new faces to replace those who are departing.

This week indeed has been tough. And the prospects are not particularly bright.

Mr. Di, a fixture at CHS for more than 20 years, will be leaving. One student noted this week the high school will not be the same without the smiling face, the caring words of Mr. Di.

This man, whose most lofty ambition is to continue in the classroom, has not been dealt with fairly in the Cohasset school system. Most would agree, he deserved the principalship more than 10 years ago.

Mr. Di has been the victim of small town politics. And we, our children and our school system will pay the price along with a man who never should have left.

We have lost a keen administrator, a sensitive advisor and a beloved teacher. It's too late to salvage the situation, but surely alternatives could have been arranged to keep this most valued asset.

If Mr. Di wanted to continue to teach, why not make him math department chairman? These are questions best tossed in the wind. They mean nothing now.

The only benefit here is the public's enlightened awareness of the public school process in Cohasset. The spotlight is turned toward the school committee and administrators.

Most people believe the committee botched the process of appointment of a new superintendent. Now they are unhappy with the fallout from hiring a new high school principal. Residents will keenly observe the selection of an assistant to principal Mary Ellen Gallagher.

We wish the new high school administrator the best of luck. It would have been easier to start things off on a more positive note. But politics of a public school system interfered.

To our graduates of 1986, we wish you the happiest of futures. A solid foundation of knowledge has been formed in the years spent here.

Remember the lessons you learned, the friendships you formed, the maturity you gained.

Take with you the eternal memories of cherished friends and family you left behind.

Savor them for a lifetime.

While you move forward through education and career, never forget the moments we shared in Cohasset.

Remember always the parents who guided you. There were teachers who cared. Mr. Di was one.

Golden opportunity is lost

Letters

To the Editor:

No, I didn't attend any special sewer study committee meetings. Like most people in town, I wasn't paying enough attention until too late. Then some of the published statements such as the proposal to combine several houses onto one septic system, and the delusion that the state would fund repairs on private property, caught my attention. The more I researched, the worse it looked—and as time went by, the worse it got. There certainly is good reason to pause and re-examine the direction—and the re-examination should not be performed by Ward nor influenced by the prejudices of the Sewer Commission or members of the sewer study committee.

Mr. Baird is partially correct in his contention that the state funding of our own treatment plant must be based on current need, and that additional capacity for future expansion of sewered area would not be funded now. But that rule became effective in October '84. If we had proceeded with the M&E plan as originally intended, we would have had the extra capacity at negligible cost to the town. Of course, the real agenda of the sewer study committee was to preclude growth by a provision of minimum sewage treatment, rather than to best solve the town's long term pollution problems. The Hull connection doesn't have the capacity to sewer Brewster Road and 3A business area because it is limited to 300,000 gallons per day, and about 500,000 gallons would be required.

One of the many nonsensical arguments against the M&E plan was that big treatment plants with ocean outfalls are doomed to failure. And yet Mr. Baird now says the Hull plant is well managed and properly functioning. If the implication is that we also could have had a properly functioning plant, I heartily agree. Incidentally, Mr. Baird's professional credentials are similar to mine, although my experience spans 35 years, mostly related to electric power generation, generating system expansion studies etc., and I'm a Registered Professional Engineer in six states and two Canadian provinces. I too was in private practice as a consulting engineer for a brief time many years ago, but abandoned it as less professionally satisfying than working with a large organization with powerful resources of varied expertise.

Maybe the sewer study committee and others concluded that the Ward plan offered sound engineering solutions, but it didn't stand up when measured against health and environmental rules. That's why it metamorphasized into a different Mickey-Mouse concept—the connection to Hull, while connecting to existing septic tanks through 2" lines. So much for the "careful investigation" by the various committees and commissions!

I admit to having a low tolerance for such judgments as that the M&E plan was self-serving, and to some emotional spluttering about the misinformation and self-delusion that the townspeople have endured like lambs. Maybe the golden opportunity to have our own excellent system at bearable cost is irretrievably gone—but let's stop and take a hard look now before stumbling onward.

R.M. Campbell

Can't afford M & E

To the Editor:

In Letters to the Editor (Mariner issues of May 22, 1986 and May 29, 1986), Mr. R.M. Campbell asserts that I used a figure of $4.4 million for Cohasset's share of the cost of phase one of the M&E Sewer Plan. Mr. Campbell, true to form, is, of course, in error. In my letter (Mariner of May 1, 1986) I used the figure of $4.6 million for the M&E Plan. This figure was subsequently increased by four percent by our engineers to adjust for inflation.

Mr. Campbell misses the point completely, however. Whichever of the three numbers is used for M&E, the cost to Cohasset would be twice the cost of the Ward Plan: M&E (phase one only), $4,806,000; Ward Plan, $2,364,000.

In summary, not only has Town Meeting repeatedly rejected the M&E Plan, we couldn't afford it anyway without voting to override Prop. 2½.

Sincerely,
Edward Guild
Sewer Commissioner

Village conversion planned for film

named after Little Compton, R.I. "It will be an incredible site," Sawchuk promised, describing how work crews will convert storefronts and interiors into a variety of stores and offices.

June Stonier, owner of The Red Balloon on North Main Street, said she and Mercer discussed the possibility of using her store in the film.

"Nothing's definite," she was assured by the production executive. "But he asked if we would participate by allowing them to use the store for a week to ten days."

Stonier complied with the request. "We would be happy to cooperate," she said as she waited on customers in the toy and clothing boutique. "Mr. Mercer said he wanted to use our store as a newspaper office. It's kind of premature to think anything's definite at this point. He was just feeling people out, seeing if we would cooperate."

Sawchuk, who toured the Village area last week with Mercer, was assured local painters and craftsmen would be hired to convert the store fronts and interiors into the facade of Little Compton.

He also noted the merchants affected by the filming will be compensated for the interference and loss of business. "It's a cooperative thing," he said. "I think the businessmen will get some personal satisfaction from having their business included in a major motion picture. It's going to be neat to see the Village stores in the film. Of course, they won't look the same, but it will be fun."

It was explained to Sawchuk that work crews will paint store fronts, redesign the exteriors and in some cases, alter the interiors of the businesses.

"For instance, they'll take out the merchandise from the front portion of The Red Balloon and put up some new lights, a fake interior wall, and put in some desks and typewriters to make it look like a real newspaper office. Then once the filming is done, they'll replace the merchandise the way it was.

"I'd love to have the film company take a lot of photographs showing the conversion process and give them to the merchants. That way, they'll have a lasting memory of the days their stores were made famous," Sawchuk laughed.

Film executives have scheduled some filming within Hernon's hair salon in the Village. Part of the North Main Street business will be converted into a delicatessen, Sawchuk confirmed. "The remaining portion of the area will be used by the film crews for make-up and hair design. That way, our local business will help out the film crews, but they'll also be compensated for their assistance."

The Chamber president noted other locations, such as the common, the First Parish Church, and perhaps the town hall auditorium, will be used in the film.

"From what I understand, the producers would like to use the common for an extraordinary scene in the film. They're going to bring in some quality visual effects from Hollywood to film some type of storm scene on the common. There's going to be lightning and winds, it ought to be something to see," Sawchuk predicted.

"I guess they're intending to bring in about seven or eight truckloads of equipment from Hollywood. This is going to be a top quality feature film, not some made-for-television production. They're going to be relying on the best quality available."

The Chamber businesses have been assured by the producers they will leave Cohasset in better shape than when they arrived. "We talked a bit about the producers compensating the town for use of town property," Sawchuk noted. "It would be great if the Hollywood people could donate a little something to a town project, such as renovating the common duck pond, or installing a sprinkler system on the common. Any kind of donation made to the town's capital improvements would be great," he said.

Although Sawchuk said the movie should not attract scores of interested out-of-towners, he figured the local economy should benefit from the probable filming.

"The local tradesmen will be called upon to help with a lot of the work. And the movie should help produce a sizeable amount of revenue for the local store owners," he stated.

"Mr. Mercer told me how they will convert Cohasset Village into Little Compton. So, although the town will probably be used in the film, it will be virtually unrecognizable. It's sort of like letting them use our facilities to reconstruct another community.

"We're being used as props for the film," the Chamber president continued. "It may be a little bit of an inconvenience to the people of Cohasset, but the producers will be working closely with the police, the fire department and selectmen. This is an historic thing for Cohasset."

Harvard grad writes home on African research

(This letter was written by Philip Dormiter. After graduating from Harvard in January, Philip left for Zaire, Africa to take part in the Harvard Ituri Project. This project involves anthropoligical-medical research among the Pygmies in the Ituri Rain Forest, in the heart of Africa. Philip and two colleagues are living in a two-hut village called Ngodingodi, from which they make excursions in to the rain forest to do their research. He will return home in August.)

To the Editor:

Since my arrival at Ngodingodi, I have spent ten days and six nights in the forest with the Pygmies. There are no two ways about it, I'm having an incredible experience.

On my first trip into the forest, I went with my partner Mark and Soli, a young Lese (Bantu) assistant. The trails are like nothing I've ever seen. In places the jungle is so dense that the trail is a tunnel through the brush — a tunnel made for people who average 4 1/2 feet high. As we walk through the densest spots, we have to plow through the vines and branches, at times using a machete or a trusty Buck knife.

The ground is quite hilly. At the tops of the higher hills, the forest thins and beings to look a little more like a New England forest. At the bottoms of the valleys are streams full of sharp quartz sand and lined with deep mud on either side. Between my sinking into the mud and sand and digging out funzas (worms that burrow into one's feet to lay eggs) with the Buck knife, my feet are toughening up quickly.

Our first entrance to a Pygmy camp was a shock. After hiking through the woods for hours (6 1/2 the last trip), one would expect to come across a clearing with huts in it. However, the camps don't break the forest at all. Only enough space is cleared to permit the construction of tentlike huts made of saplings and leaves. They are usually 3 1/2 to 4 feet high and up to 10 feet wide — a full sized person has to squeeze into them. A camp of twenty people would fit on the deck of our house. The camps are usually full of flies and smell bad, probably the result of a combination of excrement and rotten meat.

When we arrive at a camp in the early afternoon, all the able-bodied men are off hunting. They return around 3:30 or 4, usually bringing meat — often monkey or duiker (antelope) — and honey. They almost always share with us whatever they bring. We "pay" for our stay with gifts of salt, palm oil, fish hooks, medicine, and tobacco.

In the evening the Pygmies sing and tell stories —mostly of their hunting exploits. I was once treated to three hours of dying-animal sounds punctuated by imitations of bows snapping and arrows hitting home. The singing is captivating, though disorganized. People don't exactly sit down to sing. The music is improvised on rather set patterns. Occasionally someone starts up for a bit; if the mood is right, others join in. The conversation is loud and continues as long as anyone is awake. If a Pygmy wakes up in the middle of the night, the stories and singing start up again.

These are truly the most undisciplined, spontaneous people I have ever encountered. Every day they hunt and gather only enough food to eat that day (assuming nature is good to them). They store no food and never plan. When I tell them that my supplies of trade items are limited, they will ask me not to give them things right away no matter how hard they ask. They fear that they would consume them immediately, but would rather enjoy them later.

In camp both men and women wear loincloths. Old women will often wear a cloth in front and grass in back. The young Pygmies who might trade meat for other items sometimes have Western gym shorts and T-shirts. Some of the T-shirts you see out here are amazing, with U.S. movie stars, automobiles, and sports teams depicted on them.

Photography is difficult in the forest. It's often very dark and wet. Nevertheless, I've been taking quite a few pictures of the people and wildlife. Monkeys of a variety of species are evident from their calls and can be seen crashing about in the treetops. At night we go to sleep to the unearthly screams of the tree hyrax. I have yet to go into the forest without seeing several new and bizarre species of insect, including the forest cricket, a giant four-to six-inch long critter. (Sadly, our kittens were eaten by biafu, driver ants.) On forest trips, I've seen or heard traces of leopards, chimps, okapi, dik-diks, and forest buffalo. I've yet to encounter evidence of the elusive forest elephant. These are somewhat smaller than the savannah elephant, and I'm told that, unbelievable as it sounds, they can inhabit the dense forest by bulldozing their way through.

My second forest trip was by far the most taxing. I entered the forest with only Soli and an Efe (Pygmy) guide. I judged my supplies by Mark's smaller food needs. The hunting was bad for the camps, and so the food turned out to be starvation rations for three days. I never made that mistake again. The camp of the first night was very pleasant. It sat in a cave formed of two boulders leaning against each other making a dry shelter that was more spacious than the usual. That night I saw traditional Efe medicine being practiced. A young man had a hurt arm, which was treated by an old woman who made about seven slits in his shoulder with a metal-tipped arrow and rubbed ground-up herbs into the cuts.

The camp to which I hiked the second day out was the only truly hungry camp that I've seen. A woman in the camp had died shortly before I arrived at Ngodingodi. She left behind two children, one not yet weaned. We have been giving her husband powered milk and bananas to keep the children alive, but they cried all night anyway. Another woman in the camp was gored in the leg by a forest buffalo the morning that I arrived. I treated her leg with antiseptic, but it was clear that she would not gather food for some time. No food came in to the camp that day. Despite this, the men told stories and carried on as always into the night. When I got back to Ngodingodi the next day, I let my guide cut a few strings of bananas from our trees to take back.

Medically this place is a disaster. Both at Ngodingodi and in the forest one is forced to treat all kinds of things that really require professional help. We refuse to give injections, administer drugs that could provoke serious reactions, or wantonly administer antibiotics of venereal and other diseases that are universal and essentially impossible to control, given the social and sanitary situation.

Nevertheless, Mark and I treat all sorts of trauma — open sores, especially on the feet, which are often eaten away down to the bone; burns, especially in toddlers, who fall into cooking fires regularly; malaria; bad worm infestations; and so on. In a Pygmy camp one night, I applied antiseptic and bandaged the hand of an infant who had fallen into a fire. In the morning I told the mother to wash the burn and let it dry. While it was drying, she disappeared into the forest, carrying the infant with the open wound. I never got a chance to cover it again.

I am writing this letter in Isiro, which is buzzing with news of the American bombing of Libya. Anti-Khaddafy sentiment is pretty high here. Every night Mark and I turn on our shortwave receiver and listen to the Voice of America, so we're pretty well informed about what's going on in the world. I may not be able to get another letter out of Ngodingodi until early June, so don't be surprised if you don't hear from me for another six to eight weeks.

Looking forward to a trip to the Hilltop Steak House on my return —

Philip

Graduates of 1986 are filled with 'individuals' . . .

As she plans for Sunday's ceremonies, Nussdorfer assessed her class as "very serious, and ambitious. I hope they enjoy whatever they decide to do in their lives."

Student council president Corkery echoed those wishes for his classmates. "I hope they're happy and find happiness in whatever they do. And I hope they always remember what a great class we had."

Corkery, a star athlete at CHS, will attend Ripon College next year. He intends to play football at the school.

"People other than ourselves called us the rebels," he recalled. "But in my opinion, we are a bunch of individuals, we're unique. We don't do things that other classes did. We're our own people. We do things on our own.

"We are a very close class," he noted. "There were no cliques. I think we were a mature class that blended together."

The class officers remembered the death last year of classmate Mark Delaney - a tragedy that bonded them in their grief. The effects of Hurricane Gloria provided time to socialize with their classmates. "We had a lot of Gloria parties," Corkery recalled.

The football co-captain remembered how that squad pulled together after the potentially devastating injury of Floyd Hardwick. "We won a lot of games, despite Floyd's injury. We really worked together," Corkery said, praising the team's efforts that concluded in a share of the small school South Shore League division title.

This is the fourth year Sandra Best was named president of her class. The Metco student will be heading to Tufts next year, where she will major in international politics/ political science.

Traveling daily from her home in Mattapan, Best is grateful for the education she was afforded since she came to Cohasset in the first grade.

"I was very fortunate to go to Cohasset and stay all these years in this school system. It really makes a difference to stay with the same school system, and I've been successful here. It's been all to my advantage to be here," she said this week.

Becoming president of her class was an honor for Best who described her classmates as "spirited."

The class officer said she will miss her friends, many of whom she may not see after graduation. "I'll miss Mr. Di. I loved him," she added.

"The people in the main office were very good to me. The problem is you build a real close relationship with the people in this school, and it's different for me. I won't be coming back to Cohasset as often as the students who live here."

Best promised she will return to her adopted hometown "but certainly not on a daily basis. I've threatened everyone at the high school that I'll be back."

Graduation for the class president will be "happy and sad. We've just this year formed a unit as a class. There are certain senior events that really bonded us together as a class.

"I'm glad I ended my high school years in a town like Cohasset. I think I was very fortunate to get into a system like Cohasset's. It's a small school system where I was given a lot of attention. I'll miss everyone here."

Pam Ellis was first elected class treasurer back in junior high school. After graduation, Ellis will attend the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Ellis considered her class "more together than most classes, because we've had a lot of experiences that brought us closer - the death of Mark, but also the happy times such as the success of the basketball team."

The class treasurer would not describe her classmates as the brainest group to hit CHS. "We were individuals," she said, repeating the comments made by her fellow officers. "We have a great class president. Everybody loves Sandy. All the Metco students have become a real part of our class.

"We had a lot of Metco students right from the elementary grades," she continued. "They fit right into our class. Most of them come back on the weekends and we socialize together."

Ellis recalled the 1986 graduates as the class with school spirit. "The thing I'll miss most after graduation is that there'll be kids I won't see anymore. I'll miss Mr. Di, and I'll miss a lot of the kids I didn't really get to know that well," she added.

The director of guidance at CHS, John Leary, had some definite impressions of this graduating class.

"They were fun kids," he said this week, sitting inside his high school office. "They were a very social group. There were some real outstanding kids in this class - some top-notched students.

"I anticipate that they'll have bright futures," he continued. "They are intellectually capable. They've had exposure to a real good education the past four years. They probably won't realize that until they are competing with other students in college."

The guidance director recalled the 1986 seniors as an able group of students. "I believe the future holds good things for this class. But many must first learn to develop a sense of self discipline if they intend to tap their intellectual resources to the limit."

Leary noted an average amount, about 80 to 85 percent of the students, will attend four year colleges. "They are a cooperative group," he noted. "I hope they continue to work toward that bright future."

The Scoop on Souppes

A very special gift from Washington is waiting for Mayor Prudhomme's arrival next month.

Don Andrew, Cohasset executive secretary, arranged for the United States flag to be flown above the Capitol on Memorial Day, May 26. At dusk, the flag was taken down and sent to Cohasset selectmen with the enclosed certificate, "Flown over the United States Capitol for the Town of Cohasset, Massachusetts, in honor of the residents of their Sister City in France, Souppes sur Loing."

In other business of the Cultural Exchange Committee:

Last week the Cohasset Rotary Club presented a contribution of $200 to the Cultural Exchange Committee. In his letter to the committee, President John Lennon stated, "The Rotary Club of Cohasset wishes to congratulate you and your committee for the efforts put forth to welcome our Sister City to Cohasset. As an international organization, we, too, feel that exchange as a potential for world understanding is very important. We hope that the enclosed contribution will help you establish successful cultural ties with Souppes."

The gift from the Rotary Club will be used to help produce Cohasset Bicentennial Flags, one of which will be presented to the mayor of Souppes during his visit to Cohasset next month. Because several people have expressed interest in purchasing the flag, the committee has made a limited number available to the public. The flags are white nylon with the town seal flanked by two anchors in the center. They have been ordered in two sizes: 2' x 3' at $35 and 3' x 5' at $50. Proceeds from the sale of the flags will be used to pay for their production. Anyone interested should call Judy Keim, 383-1026; Mildred Mitman, 383-9766, or Marylou Lawrence, 383-6776.

According to Judy Keim, Chairman of the Cultural Exchange Committee, "As a town appointed committee, we have no access to funds. We must rely solely on contributions from local businesses and organizations. We are very grateful to the Rotary Club for their support and also to Ron Goodwin of Goodwin Graphics for his generosity and cooperation in assisting us with the production of the flags."

During his brief visit to Souppes, Paul Narkiewitz, foreign language teacher at Cohasset High School, was presented with a large emblem of Souppes' coat of arms, the story of which adds a special flavor to the character of this small village. The large soup tureen in the center of the emblem explains the origin of Souppes' name. In the 19th century Souppes was the center of the French soup industry and it was there that all the French chefs gathered to concoct and share their arts. The bridge and battlements symbolize the 13 arches that were constructed during the 15th century to protect Souppes and the surrounding area from English invasion. Two anvils flank either side of the tureen as a symbol of the stone quarries which were so important to the industry of Souppes in the last century.

In fact, the stone from Souppes was used to build the foundation of our Statute of Liberty. The two branches that frame the seal serve as reminders of the heroic efforts of their citizens during the liberation in 1944.

According to Cohasset Selectmen Cliff Mitman, "We are touched by the reception given to Paul during his visit to Souppes. As I sense the excitement and enthusiasm being generated in our town, I can only feel that positive things will come of our relationship with Souppes as we begin to build a bridge of understanding for our two cultures — for us and for our children."

Preparing plans for the June 27 Cultural Exchange dinner at Kimball's-by-the-Sea, are Chef Fred Willette, Millie Mitman, chairman of the committee's dinner plans, and Daniel Leahy, manager of Kimball's. (Eric Francis)

A successful fashion show

The annual Spring Fashion Show presented by the Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club was again a "complete sellout".

The luncheon in late April was held at Hugo's Lighthouse Restaurant in Cohasset. It is the Chief Fundraiser for the club's scholarship fund. The success of the luncheon, holiday fair, quilt raffle and other activities of the club enable the group to award a $1500 annual scholarship to a Scituate High School and Cohasset High School student.

The day of the fashion show was beautiful. The food prepared by Hugo's was excellent. The clothing by Johnny Appleseed's of Cohasset was presented by fashion coordinators Jan Lahive and Barbara Cook of Appleseeds. Models included Kathie Ruch, Janet Ciummei, Ann Dean, Patti English, Donna Blain, Diane Latta, Maureen Adams, Lori Boscow and Christiane Michels. Make-up was by Janet Ciummei of Mary Kay Cosmetics.

The show began with a turn of the century bathing suit presentation courtesy of Nancy Standard of Riverside, Connecticut. As the beach ball bounced by Nancy Standard in her "daring" long legged bathing suit the pace of the show was set. It was warm-hearted and lively.

The commentary by Noel Manion ushered in Carol Martin in an 1890 Paris, beaded cocktail dress and Tish Jordan and Amy Golden in white lace dresses from a 1900 Sears Catalogue.

Yvonne Prisble, chairperson of the fashion show, wishes to thank the local merchants for raffle donations and cooperation in helping the club with this successful scholarship fundraiser.

The Scoop on Souppes

Tickets are now available for the Cultural Exchange dinner being given in honor of Cohasset's sister city Souppes-sur-Loing.

The dinner will take place Friday, June 27, at Kimballs by-the-Sea. Tickets are $25 a piece.

Mildred Mitman, chairman of the dinner committee, noted, "The extensive French menu and wine accompaniments to the dinner certainly exceed the ticket price of $25. The committee is very grateful to Kimballs for giving so generously of their time and service and for their willingness to open their diningroom exclusively for us. They have spent many hours helping us plan this special event."

Because of seating, tickets are limited. Anyone interested in attending should contact a member of the committee immediately. Phone Mildred Mitman, 383-9766 or Judy Keim, 383-1026.

The occasion will begin with wine and hors d'oeuvres served on the patio at 6:30 p.m. Dinner will commence at 7:30. Particular details of the menu are still in the refinement stage; however, the seven courses will include cold consomme, a fish course, sorbet, the entree, salad, platters of fruit and cheese, and a grand chocolate finale. Appropriate wines will accompany each course.

Presentations of gifts will follow the dinner. To Mayor Prudhomme, Representative Mary Jeanette Murray will present Governor Dukakis's Proclamation which establishes Cohasset's official kinship with Souppes; and Selectwoman Mary Jane McArthur will present two flags — the American flag that flew over the Capital on Memorial Day and the Cohasset Bicentennial flag. To Monsieur Dine, Chairman of Souppes's Cultural Exchange Committee, Judy Keim will present a tile of the Lothrop House.

The Committee also urges everyone in Cohasset to mark their calendars for the town-wide reception being given in honor of the Mayor and his guest Saturday, June 28 at 4 p.m. at the Lothrop House.

The Cultural Exchange Committee still has several applications from Souppes people who wish to exchange with an individual or family this year. Anyone interested should call Elizabeth Warren, 383-1026 or Marylou Lawrence, 383-6776.

Volunteer tour guides

Secretary of State, Michael Connolly, has announced the Volunteer Summer Tour Guide program will be offered again this year. This is a very successful program that began in 1972. To date, more than a thousand students have participated.

Participating students conduct tours of the State House and handle other related duties on a part-time or full-time basis. Students learn much about history, architecture, and the legislative process. It is an excellent opportunity for high school students interested in government, communications, public relations, and history.

Interested students should plan to attend one of two orientation sessions in Doric Hall on Wednesday, June 4th, or Tuesday, June 10th, at 3 p.m.

Lamaze refresher course

A three-week refresher course to prepare couples for childbirth utilizing the Lamaze method is being offered in Scituate. This class will be led by a Registered Nurse, fully certified by the American Society for Psychopropylaxis in Obstectrics (ASPO), with extensive labor room experience. The course will provide a properly structured update for couples who had a complete childbirth class with a previous pregnancy.

The class will review information about labor and the birth process. It will discuss modern and proven tools and techniques used during labor such as, conscious relaxation, visual concentration, breathing techniques, and activities for the birth support partner.

The sessions will also cover the post-partum period (after the birth experience) and the preparation of older brothers and sisters for the new baby.

The next class will begin June 13. For more information or to register for the class, contact Rebecca Fay, RN, ACCE, at 545-9152.

Chamber meeting, June 11

The public is invited to a dinner meeting of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, June 11 at 6:15 p.m. at Hugo's Lighthouse Restaurant.

After a light dinner at 6:15 p.m., guest speaker Jerry Ellis, founder of Building 19, will address the membership and the general public in attendance.

Building 19 retails insurance salvage and "off-price" merchandise under the slogan "Good Stuff Cheap." Bird cages without tops and flyswatters with holes in the center (to give a fly a sporting chance), are the types of products in Building 19's disheveled showroom.

Ellis will describe the common sense approach which has worked as his secret of greatness.

A humorous and provocative evening is in store for all who attend. Chamber members and the general public are invited to the dinner and the presentation.

Bloodmobile Monday, June 16

The next Cohasset Community Triannual Red Cross Bloodmobile will be held Monday, June 16, from 2:30 to 7:30 p.m. at the Unitarian First Parish House, 23 No. Main St. (Across from the Common).

Former Chairman, Corinne Cahill, R.N. will again be the coordinator on the day of the Bloodmobile.

Representatives of Church, Business and Organization Groups will contact potential donors for appointments.

Ninety-eight donors participated in the January 27, 1986 Bloodmobile. It is hoped 150 donors will respond to this Bloodmobile.

Anyone in good health weighing more than 110 pounds, and being age 17 or older can participate. Age 17 will need parental consent. Age 65 and over limit has been eliminated.

For further information call chairman Al Odermatt at 383-1283.

Garden Club flower show

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset had its annual meeting at Hugo's Wednesday, May 28.

A flower show by members and junior gardeners judged by member Viven Bobo was followed by a fashion show by Evana. Garden club members who served as fashion models were: Debbie Hanian, Jeanne Replogle, Susan Roy, Linda Starmer, Jane Goff, Joanne Haynes, Susan O'Brien and Chris Whoriskey.

A special award was presented to Mrs. Merritt M. Swain (Doris) for service and commitment over the year to the Community Garden Club.

First prizes for flower arrangements were awarded to Mrs. Thomas Brady (Helen), Mrs. Patrick J. Hurley (Cynthia), and Mrs. Richard L. Fallon (Leslie). To our junior gardeners, first prize was awarded to Priscilla Goff, Erin Lennona and Adrienne Thompson.

Chairpersons for this annual luncheon meeting were Mrs. William McAuliffe (Laura) and Mrs. Paul V. Wessling (Cynthia).

First Parish celebration

In honor of the completion of the restoration of the exterior of the historic First Parish Meeting House, the public is invited to a Celebration Service Sunday, June 15 at 4:30 p.m.

The service of readings, greetings from the community, a brief rendition of the history of the building, hymns and songs from the Hand Bell Choir will be followed by informal refreshments at the Parish House.

The Meeting House, built in 1747, is one of Cohasset's most historic buildings. It was once the seat of town government and its center for religious workship. With the separation of church and state early in the nineteenth century, governmental activities were removed to other locations and persons of differing religious persuasions were freed to construct their own buildings for worship and meetings. This separation of church and state and the growth of diverse approaches to religion has enriched the life of our community, yet there is sustaining interest in the community for the historic role of the First Parish Meeting House.

The church members hope townspeople will join them on June 15 to share their pleasure in seeing the Meeting House adorned with a fresh coat of paint and in good repair.

Yankee Company hosts auction

Everyone was a winner at the Big Sister Association of Greater Boston's Second Annual Auction, May 18.

The benefit was held at the Oaks Estate in Cohasset, formerly the Jessie B. Cox Estate and now the corporate headquarters for the Yankee Companies.

The highest bid for the day went for a Wang "Office Assistant" at $2,000. Nearly 100 other items included a game of raquetball and lunch with television anchor Liz Walker; a cruise for 20 on a 66-foot yacht; a learn-to-ski week at Killington, VT; a skybox at the Boston Garden for a Celtics or Bruins game and a Macintosh computer. Board member Jack Angew of Agnew, Carter and McCarthy Public Relations served as auctioneer and kept the bidding lively!

The function was chaired by Big Sister Board President Elizabeth R. Montle of Hingham. Paul Montle, president of the Yankee Companies, provided the Oaks Estate for the event.

Golden questions ability to run Pilgrim safely

(The following letter was sent to Stephen Sweeney, president of the Boston Edison Co.)

Dear Mr. Sweeney:

I was dismayed, but not surprised, to learn that the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission considers the Pilgrim Nuclear Power Plant in Plymouth to be one of the worst managed nuclear generating facilities in the United States. For many years now, I have observed with keen interest and growing concern the continuing pattern of safety violations and mismanagement at the Pilgrim Plant.

As a state senator who must share in the governmental responsibility for protecting the health, safety and welfare of the citizens of the Commnwealth, I believe that the time has come to openly and candidly question the ability of the Boston Edison Company to safely operate the Pilgrim facility.

The incidents at Third Mile Island and Chernobyl are stern warnings of the risks and unacceptable consequences inherent in the operation of nuclear facilities. These warnings should not give way to emotion or to panic, but only at great penalty can they be ignored.

I believe that the people of Massachusetts must be provided with every opportunity to fully participate in determining the future of nuclear power generation in the Commonwealth. If they are to do so, they must understand fully the costs and consequences of this energy source and be given the opportunity to review and question the industry officials who are responsible for the technology and management of these facilities.

Only then will the citizens of the Commonwealth have the appreciation and understanding of nuclear technology necessary to fully evaluate and assess its costs and benefits and to determine intelligently the future of continued nuclear power generation in this State.

In an effort to provide all residents of the South Shore with the opportunity to understand and to scrutinize Boston Edison's operation of the Pilgrim Power Plant, I am inviting you and other representatives of your company to a public forum where you can address the following issues before a panel of South Shore Legislators:

(1) The safety record of the Pilgrim facility;

(2) Current plans to improve the operation and management of the Pilgrim facility; and

(3) Alternatives to the continued operation of the Plant by the Boston Edison Company.

Please contact my office upon receipt of this letter so that we can make arrangements for the scheduling of this forum.

William B. Golden
State Senator

Teams downed in tournament play this week

By Lisa Shumaker
Mariner Correspondent

BOYS' TENNIS

After clinching the league championship by beating Norwell 4-1, the boys continued their success by opening the state tournament with a tremendous victory over Canton, 5-0.

Cohaset dominated every match and completely overpowered the weaker Canton team. Coach Ed Amarall was very pleased with the victory and felt his team's mental toughness was the key to the win.

First singles player Rich Reddick had an outstanding match and hung in tough to pull out an impressive victory. Second singles player Chris Ryan also had a great day blowing by his opponent. Third singles player Fred Wilshire overpowered his opponent for a victory.

First doubles team Derrick Lacks and Danny Farwell and second doubles team Steven Myers and Jason Marsac both defeated their opponents handedly.

Unfortunately, Cohasset went on to face undefeated Sharon in the second round of the tournament and lost 4-1. Amarall still felt his team turned in a great effort and should not let this disappointing loss mar a virtually unblemished season.

Chris Ryan after losing the first set came back to win the next two. This victory was Cohasset's only one that day unfortunately. However, both Rich Reddick and Fred Wilshire lost tough 3 set matches, and thus, the match was much closer than the scare indicates.

Overall, Amarall was thoroughly pleased with the season and felt his team improved tremendously as the spring wore on. Amarall bèlieves his team was playing especially well this past three weeks with the culmination of its hard work occurring in Norwell when Cohasset captured the league championship.

The Skippers will be losing Chris Ryan who has been a tremendous asset to the team this year, however, next year the boys will be looking forward to continued success and hopefully will even improve upon this season's impressive record.

GIRLS' TENNIS

After being rained out Wednesday, the girls opened the state tournament on Thursday against Bourne. Unfortunately, this was to be the girls' last road trip of the season for they lost.

The girls played well but just could not hold on against such a tough opponent.

However, this loss should not take away from the team's tremendous season. The girls had a great year and should come back stronger even next year for they are only losing three seniors Carolyn O'Brien, Linda O'Loughlin and Lee Sullivan.

Hopefully, the girls will be able to improve upon this year's record and go even further in the tournament next year.

Troop 28 sponsors Country Fair

The Cohasset Country Fair, featuring exhibits on arts and crafts, collectables, antiques and attic treasures will start the festive summer season at Cohasset Common on Saturday June 7 from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.

Along with the displays themselves, craft demonstrations by local artists are being planned. Cohasset community organizations will also have exhibits on their activities, including a camping and canoeing exhibit by Cohasset's Boy Scout Troop 28. In addition to the displays, there will be a refreshment stand featuring hot dogs, balloons, popcorn and cold beverages.

The fair is sponsored by the Friends of Troop 28 for the benefit of the troop's New York-Canada trip and summer camp program.

Added attractions include the Bare Cove Fire Museum, which will exhibit antique fire apparatus; the U.S. Coast Guard Life Saving Museum exhibits; the Hull Life Saving Museum and the Troop 38 camping and canoeing display.

Troop 28 wins first place

More than 250 Boy Scouts from the Old Mills District recently attended a weekend camp-out at Camp Child in Plymouth.

The scouts had to build a raft to compete in racing events. The only requirement was that rope be used to secure the floating devices together. This was the true test of good ingenuity as well as knot tying.

Troop 28 Boy Scouts won first place among the 28 rafts entered.

The scouts who participated were: John Maciel, Dan Curtin, David Farrag, Bill Anstead, Michael and Nicholas Lelecas, Jim Long, Jim Cedarstrom, Chris McElroy, Adam McNamara, John O'Leary, Donald Caffery and Mark Lavange.

Gallagher sparkles as principal selection

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The School Committee last Thursday announced the appointment of a new principal for Cohasset High School.

Mary Ellen Gallagher, an assistant principal at Hingham High School replaces Richard Streeter, who became assistant superintendent.

Gallagher sparkled during the final round of interviews Wednesday, as the School Committee grilled three finalists for the principal's post.

She edged Robert Jarvis, the principal of Methuen High School, and Tom Davis, the principal of Westbury High School in Houston, Texas.

The interviews left School Committee members a tough night's task, as each made a positive impression.

"This is the toughest decision we have faced or will face," Committee Chairman Joseph Nedrow said.

Gallagher opened the evening's competition, as she presented her educational philosophy based on democracy and justice.

"My philosophy in a broad sense, is democratic," she told the committee. "I firmly believe that all people in the school building are on the same team.

"It is very important," she added, "for the principal to identify the strengths of individuals on the team, and to use those strengths in every way that it is possible to do so."

Gallagher defined her perspective of the principalship.

"The principal must be primarily the instructional leader of the building," she said. "The principal is responsible for everything, such as building a master schedule so that it accommodates teachers' needs as well as students needs.

"The principal must work to eliminate as much bureaucratic red tape as possible, freeing up the time in the day to give teachers the maximum time to teach."

She added, "Another aspect of my philosophy is that the principal, as a decision maker, should involve the people in the school in the making of decisions.

"I think it is totally unacceptable," she said, "to ask people to carry out a decision in which they had no part."

Gallagher said she believes in setting a good example.

"In the school system," she explained, "the educator must be a role model for students.

"The principal certainly cannot expect the teachers to be here on time if the principal is not on time. I think it's vital that the principal be the first one in the building in the morning and the last one to leave as well."

Along with democracy, Gallagher said she also believes in a philosophy of justice, when it comes to discipline.

"Students would tell you they can talk to me," she explained, "They'd say I'm strict, but fair."

She added, "I would not discipline students in front of other students, but I would involve parents, not as a punitive action, but to work with the student and help solve problems."

Of Cohasset, Gallagher told the committee, "I haven't found anything I don't like. There's a strong staff here, but the most obvious strength I'm aware of, is the acheivements of the students. It's a strong academic school with a lot of parental involvement.

"That kind of process creates energy," she said. "It's a real moral booster."

Gallagher told the committee, one of her goals as principal, will be to deal with the "middle-of-the-road" students, as well as doing more in terms of getting basic skills in place at the junior high school level.

Robert Jarvis, the principal of Methuen High School has been credited by students there, for

Translated from the Latin

CHS Latin III students; translated the following Medieval Latin poems about spring into English, keeping the same meter and using rhyming lines:

A Spring Rhyme

All ready it is time, it is time for spring
The land is blossoming grass and things
The sun with new rays oh so bright
The groves branch-out, it's just out of sight
Lilys turn white
They flower all around
The sky is calm
The air just can't keep you down
The wind is peaceful
The temperature makes you want to drool
The days are clear
The birds sing smooth
The dreadful westwind, smoothing out like he's dead
Just about makes you want to spin on your head
Sweet sounding reeds echo with resounding sound
Flowers with flowers flower in vines all around
Bearing an odor the grass is alive
A farmer celebrates because the heart thrives

By David Shumaker

I.
Now it is the time of Spring,
The earth, the grass are thriving;
The new rays of sun;
Unfurling of leaves;
The lilies turn white;
Now all is in bloom.

Sky above is tranquil, calm,
So smooth, the air is warming.
A breeze is relaxed,
A balminess here;
The day is so bright;
And birds how they sing.

Gone now is the dreadful cold,
Replaced by warmth and sunlight;
The sun not yet hot;
New bunches of vines;
The whistle of reeds;
The scent of the rose.

Smell the grass, the scent of spring;
The farmer, he rejoices.

II.
Gone is the harshness of winter, so cold,
Ice's the stiffness which once were so bold;
Gone are the rage's the wildness of winds;
Sluggish were spirits's wicked were sins;
Paleness's ayer of winter itself;
Sadness's thinness of Santa's last elf.

Spring, on the edge of new lite all around;
Skies now shine brightly w/out all the clouds;
Faces of nighttime now flash w/the stars;
Temperature's pleasant — it's too hot for cars;
Now is the time to develop an art.

Crust of the earth now is free from the cold;
Fragrance of grass now replaces the mold;
Picturesque birds and the new songs they sing;
Youth of man rests's the meadows grow green.

L. Kuhn

Now is the time for spring
The earth begins to bloom and sing
The sun glows with its new born rays
Promising, long and fun-filled days
White lilies grow, bloom and flower
The serene sky gives an awe of majestic power
A tranquil wind provides days warm and clear
The birds sing for both laughter and tear
The calm west wind whistles and blows
And all that is springtime hears it and knows
That this is the season where everything's cool
And those who enjoy it are nobody's fool
For those who experience that springtime smell
Will forever be graced by its wonderful spell
From the poor humble farmer who rejoices with glee
To the rich and proud merchant who sails over the sea
The springtime means so much to one and all
We look forward to its return from now till next fall.

Jim Rourke

I.
Already with the advent of Spring
The earth beams with grass and other things
The sun reaches out with bright new rays
As trees branch out to greet the new days
The lilies awaken and whiten the ground
While everything else blooms all around
The calmness on earth is reflected in the sky
In the smooth air currents birds just float by
As the bright new day is beginning
The feathered songstresses begin their singing
Even the fearsome North Wind blows softly
While the calm South Wind blows smooth and lofty

Winter move on in your cold and hard way
Go on take your ice and make our day
Now blow your wintry rage away
To your wicked sluggishness we all say nay
We grieve your pale rule and long for sweet May.

Soon Spring will be here with elegant graces
Shining without clouds onto cold spaces
She smiles on us with her beautiful faces
Making our lands into comfortable places
All our sorrows and fears away she chases.

Free and happy under the face above
The grass grows under the warmth of her love
While on the fir rests the sweet singing dove.

M. McElroy

The land gives way to a gentle new spring
Replacing the cold with a new fig
In comes the howl of the westwind
The northwind leaving you and your kin
The newness of thing hitting you right on the shin.

The birds are singing and so is the youth
Harder than iron, he is very uncouth
Colder than a rock is not full of fire
The clouds of the mind roll away like a tire.

The fruit is renewed with the call of the crow
Driven out is the harmful cold and the snow
The earth is graced with flowers once more
Sweet smelling and beautiful right to the core.

Charles Sturdy

The land is full of fun and laughter because of Spring's return
Winter's gone and plants are growing: rose and grass and fern,
A gentle zephyr from the west is warming in the Spring,
Not like that awful northwind in the winter moving things.

The birds sing sweet songs of love while the youth do the same,
If anyone is not in love, then Venus is to blame,
Everything would seem so empty if there was no sun,
Nature strikes the mind in Spring and everyone has fun.

Behold the fruits of Spring, they can be seen everywhere,
The harmful cold of winter's gone, the weather is now to share.

David Shultz

Hope for spring has returned
With plenty of Delight,
Colors glorify all the earth
Purple flowers are in sight.

Birds sing their charming songs
Groves gain back their green,
Pleasantness is in the fields
It's absolutely keen!

Pizza for the band

Instrumental music instructor extraordinaire, Ruth Dalbeck, teaches and conducts the Deer Hill School Band. They recently performed at the Spring Concert and Memorial Day Parade. Mrs. Dalbeck treated her fine musicians to pizza in the Deer Hill cafeteria last week. The band deserved the treat for their hard work.

Mrs. Dalbeck deserves the "Golden Pizza Award" for her spirit and enthusiasm. Thank you, Mrs. Dalbeck and thank you, band members, for some wonderful music!

PSO will give grants

The PSO (Parent School Organization) recently announced they would initiate a program of mini-grants to teachers for enrichment activities beginning next October.

PSO President Nancy Sandell said that this is a great way to use the funds left over in the PSO treasury.

A total of $2,400 in grants will be awarded by lottery, ranging from $50 to $200. The PSO based the amount on $2 per pupil. Under this formula, teachers at the Joseph Osgood School are eligible for $652; those at Deer Hill School, $498, and those at CHS, $1,318.

Teachers are asked to apply for the grants in writing. Nancy Sandell asks that the money be used for something not usually available through the schools, geared to groups of students rather than individuals. "We don't want to spend the money on textbooks or athletic equipment," said the PSO president.

A Scholar

Seventh grade student, Michael Cisneros, will be traveling to Baltimore, Maryland, this weekend to be honored at an awards ceremony at the Johns Hopkins University.

Michael was one of 18 seventh graders from Cohasset who participated in this year's talent search for gifted students, conducted annually by Johns Hopkins University. He received a Regional Award for Achievement in Math.

There will be a ceremony June 15 at Boston College for students being honored on the state level. At that time, Michael will receive awards for accomplishments in both verbal and math tests.

The awards are based on scores achieved on the standard SAT exams which were given in January. Congratulations, Michael Cisneros!

Early Release Day

Thursday, June 19, will be an Early Release Day in the Cohasset Public Schools. There will be no afternoon Kindergarten sessions and other students will be dismissed according to the following schedule:

School	Buses Depart
Junior/Senior High School	10:10 a.m.
Deer Hill School	11:40 a.m.
Joseph Osgood School	11:10 a.m.

Lunch will be served in all of the schools.

This Early Release Day has been authorized by the Cohasset School Committee to allow the staff members at the Junior/Senior High School, Joseph Osgood School and the Deer Hill School to review the effectiveness of curriculum throughout the system.

A matter of ethics

The question in the final exam in Ethics and Literature at CHS was:

In the course of this class, what have been the influences on your ethics, morals and values? (What particular stimuli have affected what particular ethics, morals or values?)

A student's answer:

This class has really taught me a lot, but has also opened my eyes to things that were always right in front of me. For instance, teachers. I always knew that some of my teachers had good qualities, but it wasn't until Mrs. Foley brought up the note that I ever really stopped and thought about how influential teachers really are.

On Teacher Appreciation Day I decided to think of all the teachers I have had and how they influenced me. I came up with (12) teachers that I have had and wrote them all little notes telling them how much they meant to me. It made me feel good to know that I learned more than just anatomy, math, grammar, etc., but I learned from experienced people how to cope with "real life problems and events."

I'm glad I got the chance to be in Ethics, and I think having it fourth quarter was great because I didn't really get all that excited about school, but Ethics helped me to get my morals into perspective.

Zotos receives honors

Frederic P. Zotos of Cohasset has been the recipient of several honors while completing his third year of studies in Mechanical Engineering at Northeastern University in Boston.

He has been active in extra-curricular activities while maintaining honors grades and has also had two years of cooperative work experience at the Bird Machine Company located in South Walpole.

During the 1985-86 academic year, Frederic served as president of NU's student chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers (ASME). The group was very active under his leadership and was awarded "The Best Chapter in New England" prize at a recent regional meeting held at Western New England College in Springfield.

Early in May he was initiated into Pi Tau Sigma, the National Mechanical Engineering Honor Society, and attended the Engineering Honors Banquet at the Musuem of Science in Boston on May 31. May 21, he received the joint ASME/Ferretti award at the Mechanical Engineering Honors dinner held at NU.

His parents, Professor and Mrs. John Zotos, attended this event.

In April, Frederic, along with his father, were the guests of Dr. H. Richard Nesson, president of Brigham and Women's Hospital, at their first annual spring symposium and lecture series held in the George W. Thom Building for Medical Research. They heard presentations from three world renowned medical researchers at B&W and Harvard Medical School and met other dignitaries during the reception which followed.

Meeting house shutters

As you have no doubt noticed, the shutters were removed from the Meeting House while the building was being painted. Many of these shutters are in very poor structural condition and require major repairs and they all need to be painted. Costs of this project are not included in the painting contractor or renovation of the building.

The Maintenance Committee has studied alternative methods for restoring, painting and rehanging the shutters. Cost range from approximately $500 if the church does the work to about $10,000 for replacement with new custom made shutters.

These various options will be explained to the Parish at the Annual Meeting Wednesday, June 11, 1986.

Some parishioners have expressed their opinion the shutters should not be put back on the Meeting House; others feel they should be reinstalled.

An article in the Warrant will provide for the necessary funds to pay for this project if the Parish wants the shutters on the Meeting House.

In the meantime, specific questions on this subject may be directed to Arthur Johnsen at 383-0170 who is Chairman of the Maintenance Committee and has made an extensive survey on the shutters.

Parish committee notes

Sunday morning, May 18, the Parish Committee voted to permit Warner Bros. to film scenes from "The Witches of Eastwick" within the Meeting House asssuming that a few details concerning protection of the property and the parish can be resolved before an agreement is signed by the Chairman. This agreement when signed will permit use of the building, but confirmation from Warner Bros. as to whether or not Cohasset will be chosen as the location for the film production is still pending.

BULGE

(Boston Unitarian Lunch Group Elite) will meet Monday, June 2 at 11:45 a.m. at Remington's (near the Colonial Theatre), Boston.

Canvass news

The dream is becoming a reality. From the Parish there's $165,608 in pledges to the Meeting House Campaign and $40,315 toward the 1986-1987 Annual Canvass. Sixty-two calls are yet to be made. The goals are within sight.

Second Congregational

Members and Friends of the church are invited to Rev. Benbow's Installation Service at the First Congregtional Church in Milton (495 Canton Avenue, next to the Milton Town Hall) on June 8 at 4 p.m. You are also invited to the reception which follows.

Choir Show and Family Supper — What better night for witches, ghosts, poison and sleep-walking than Friday the 13th!. Don't miss "What Happened to Macbeth" and the Potluck Supper at 6:30 p.m. on June 13. For the supper, every family bring one casserole; A-G bring a salad; H-O bring rolls; P-Z bring dessert.

Youth volunteers open

The South Shore Association for Retarded Citizens (SSARC) wants to thank the following members of the United Church of Christ Youth Group for making possible an instructional swim program for their friends with special needs: Marnie Lawrence, Heather McGowan, Kelly McGowan, Jennifer Sheehan, Julie Trask, Mark Travis, Sandra Turpie, and Jennifer Woodworth.

The SSARC would also like to thank Webb's Gym for donating the use of the pool on Sunday afternoons for this eight-week program.

The volunteers assisted instructor, Sue Livingston of Duxbury, by being responsible for one, sometimes two, people with special needs develop their swimming skills. In addition, this as well as other recreational programs, gives the children/adults an opportunity to develop and foster friendships and gain in self-esteem.

The Youth Group volunteers did a great job and hopefully benefited from this experience as well. They were enthusiastic, dedicated and very capable.

Eastern Edison revises storm emergency plan

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

Eastern Edison has revised its storm emergency plan after a state investigation found that the company could have improved communications and hired additional work crews more quickly during Hurricane Gloria.

Eastern Edison filed its response to the state department of public utilities' investigation last week and has made several improvements to its emergency plan, Vice President Robert Wolff said.

The company has installed 18 additional telephone lines to help meet the demand for information during a storm, and has designated five lines for use by municipal and town officials.

The company will release a special phone number to town officials prior to an emergency situation to keep communities informed. Also, special lines for the media will be provided.

"Town officials will have some of the heat removed if we're all cooperating," Wolff said. "We've gone a long way to gain this cooperation."

Wolff said that the company has met with 58 town officials and 12 tree wardens since last September's hurricane to discuss emergency procedures and electricity restoration priorities. The company will continue to meet periodically with public officials, Wolff said.

The department of public utilities conducted the investigation of Eastern Edison in response to an "extraordinarily high level of customer dissatisfaction with Eastern Edison's response" to the hurricane, according to the department's report.

"The number of calls received (by the department) from customers of Eastern Edison was significantly higher than the number of calls received from customers of other electric companies," the report said, "even at a time when each company had approximately the same number of customers without service."

The department investigated Eastern Edison's general preparedness, the adequacy of its ongoing maintenance program, and its specific response to Hurricane Gloria, holding three public hearings and three evidentiary hearings.

The department's report was critical of two areas: Eastern Edison's slowness in obtaining additional work crews and and communication with the public and within the company.

The department found that Eastern Edison has engaged in continuous upgrading of its system, and that there has been no unexplained or unreasonable decrease in repair or maintenance over the last 15 years.

The department also found that the company's tree-trimming program was adequate, and that "...the most destructive type of damage, from trees falling over and taking down poles, was not something that could have been prevented by any tree-trimming effort short of trimming all the trees at the base," the report said.

Eastern Edison's employees are currently being trained in the use of the new emergency plan. "We've harnessed every person in the company with storm duties in some capacity," Wolff said.

Wolff also said that the company will make earlier contact with other utilities to acquire additional work crews in the event of a storm, and that hotel rooms for these crews will be booked earlier.

Wolff said he was pleased with the department's report. "The report was quite firm, but fair," he said.

"The hard evidence shows we got hit pretty hard," Wolff said, " and there's no reason to believe that the system hasn't been maintained. This company has an ongoing campaign to restore confidence at all levels.

"We were here 50 years ago, we're here today, and we'll be here 50 years from now," said Wolff, "and we want to show the community that we're going to continue to be good citizens."

Eastern Edison's Brockton office serves 17 South Shore communities including Cohasset, Scituate, Norwell, Hanover and Pembroke.

stalled negotiations in October and have been meeting regularly with the personnel board members and union representatives.

Throughout the prolonged and often angry negotiations, Officer Pomarico warned it was affecting department morale. "It's not just the contract business, but the department is not functioning properly. Hopefully, we can settle this thing and get things back to normal," he said last October at the height of negotiations.

Now with the contract about to be signed, Pomarico noted, "We can relax. Things are set for the next couple of years. We didn't get everything we wanted, but the money was right. Some of the smaller items we wanted are not included. But the big issue was money, and that was a fair offer from the town.

"Now it's time for the department to get back to the job at hand," he added.

'The Case Resolved' - More on Sacco-Venzetti

When we left the Third Thursday author series in April, there was doubt Bob Hale, proprietor of Duxbury's Westwinds Bookshop, could top the David McCord talk. His May offerings were not a let-down.

The Sacco-Vanzetti case is to America what the Dreyfus case was to France, our very own celebrated cause. Francis Russell of Sandwich, a tall, authoritative author, has published "The Case Resolved." Russell, who wrote "Adams, An American Dynasty" and the highly recommended "Shadow of Blooming Grove," writes for "National Review of Books," and "American Heritage" and has a piece in a recent "N.Y. Review of Books.'

He began the book to establish finally the innocence of the pair. In 1920, a paymaster and his guard for a shoe company in South Braintree (across Pearl St. from Sigma Instruments) were shot and killed by two men who escaped with $15,000. Sacco and Vanzetti were Italian immigrants. Vanzetti had lived and worked in Plymouth.

Their arrest and conviction caused a wave of emotion to sweep the nation and the world. The American flag was burned in South Africa. Flags were at half-mast in Russia, and Russell had a Russian poster showing the Statue of Liberty with her torch upside down. "To believe in their guilt," he said, "made you as popular as the Registrar of Motor Vehicles."

They were sentenced to death. The execution was delayed until 1927. As late as 1977 Gov. Dukakis declared a Sacco-Vanzetti Day "to remove all stigma from these two men" although he didn't say if he thought them guilty or innocent.

As he began the detective work of researching his book, Russell was able, under the Freedom of Information Act, to examine many papers not available previously. He became convinced not of their innocence but of their guilt. Midbook he changed sides. Publication was delayed, the manuscript grew from 60,000 words to 300,000 which he resented because "I'm lazy," and he became so certain of the facts that he chose what Alan Dershowitz called "an arrogant title."

Russell believes the case will go on, but for him, the facts are in. He's a fine speaker, leaving his audience with the impression he is full of fascinating information and could never be boring.

Stokes Nature Guides

Donald and Lillian Stokes are a young, vibrant, very attractive couple with a contagious enthusiasm for nature. Together they produce a series of nature guides. Rather than the usual helps to "What is this plant, this bird, this animal track?" they aim to help you appreciate "all the wonder in everything in nature."

By Peggy Beals
FROM THE BOOKSHELF

Working with an unimpressive group of props: a wilted dandelion plant, a little bird nest, a couple of wild flowers, the pair took turns telling their rapt audience the amazing features of each.

"Wildflowers," Donald says, "are animals in slow motion." He explained how the dandelion root pulls the plant in the soil so it will spread and capture all possible sun. When the plant is going to seed, the stem grows taller so the wind can scatter the fluffy heads." Each seed is notched so it will anchor itself when it lands."

He describes nature as "full of unquestioned answers." The couple are avid to discover the whys, the ethic of each plant, each animal as it has evolved. Behind their witty, often hilarious descriptions of their props, their profound knowledge is evident. No one wanted the session to end.

The Stokes Nature Guides are published by Little, Brown. They include one on insects, "Guide to Bird Behavior Vol. 1," and because so many people protested their favorite was left out, Vol 2, also, and guides to wild flowers, animal traits and behavior, and one on the woods in winter. Harper & Row will publish their guide to shrubs and vines.

Coat of Arms

What's in a name? Is this you Randolph?

By Frank Keady
Special to the Mariner

Early documents indicate that the name Randolph is one which has been found in England at least since the Conquest and probably before. The name has sources in the Norse "Rannulfr" which means "shield wolf," the old German "Rannulf" which means "raven wolf," and the Anglo-Saxon "raed wolf" meaning "counsel wolf."

In a record which dated back to 1095, the Latin form Randulfus is entered and a few years later, in the Gilbertine Charters of 1155, the name appears as Randulphus, the "f" having been replaced by "ph."

The name was held in high esteem by the Anglo-Normans and, because of its popularity, a number of variants arose to distinguish between the many individuals with the name.

By the 14th century, the forms Randoll, Ralph, Rankin and Rancock had become established surnames of their own. In the famous medieval morality play, "Piers Plowman," mention of the Randolph name is found in the following excerpt: "But I kan (know) rymes of Robyn Hood, and Randolph, eri of Chestre," it was due in large part to the fame of this Randolf that the name spread throughout the area.

Thomas Randolph was chamberlain of Scotland for some years during the reign of Alexander III. His son, Thomas, was the Earl of Moray (or Murray).

In America, the Randolph name is an important one in the history of the colonies and especially in Virginia. William Randolph was born in Warwickshire, England and came to Virginia in 1673. He was a founder of William and Mary College.

Among his many distinguished decendants were: Sir John Randolph, the first president of the Continental Congress; Edmund Jennings Randolph, aide-de-camp to George Washington, attorney general and secretary of state of the United States; and John Randolph, American statesman with service in the House of Representatives and the United Staes Senate.

Available statistics indicate that the name Randolph ranks in the top 700 names, by numerical strength, in the United States.

If you would like a history of your family name and a facsimile of your coat of arms, please send $3 plus self addressed envelope to Is This You, P.O. Box 806, Westwood, MA 02090.

Arrangements can be made for a full color reproduction.

Health board okays conditions for landfill

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The Board of Health Monday voted to accept three proposals by Cohasset Heights Ltd., which will keep the private landfill on Crocker Lane open and operating.

First, the board accepted a plan for the location of a scale and traffic controls at the dump.

Board members were most concerned about the scale's readout procedure.

"The key factor," board chairman Dr. John Burns said, "is how it records."

Burns and his colleagues indicated they will require an automatic printout, including truck or route number, for their records, when the scale is installed.

Landfill owner Paul Barry told the board, "I don't foresee the scale being unmanned. Someone has to be there to fill out forms for billing."

Barry said he didn't know how long it will take to put the scale into operation, but the board asked for an estimate for its next meeting, June 16.

The board said it would "take the proposal under advisement" and send plans for the scale to its engineers. Meanwhile, Health Agent Joseph Godzik was asked to inspect the equipment.

The scale will also have to be tested by the state.

Cohasset Heights Ltd. also submitted closure and post-closure recommendations, as well as a proposal for liability insurance.

Board member Dr. C. Michael Bliss, explained the problem of "occurence" has made it tough for landfills to get insurance.

He described the phenomenon as a lawsuit brought for past transgressions, which would be covered by the insurance policy the landfill owner was covered with at the time of the crime.

The Cohasset Heights Ltd. plan proposes the landfill join an organization called the Will Group, which is an intra-industry insurance plan, financed by participants in, or associated with the landfill business.

Under the Will plan, an industry owned insurance company will offer environmental impairment liability insurance as a partial solution to the problem of unavailability from standard insurance companies.

These three proposals, which the Board of Health accepted, were among a list of ten stipulations the board required Cohasset Heights Ltd. to fulfill in order to be allowed to stay open.

The board has previously accepted proposals by Cohasset Heights Ltd. for the employment of a part-time spotter, for the provision of evidence of off-site disposal and contracts, as well as funds to continue off-site disposal for 120 days.

The board also previously accepted a plan by Cohasset Heights Ltd. to implement a surface and groundwater monitoring program. That program should be operational by July 18.

The last two provisions, of liability insurance and of a performance bond or financial assurance to the Town, including the cost of off-site disposal, will be due June 29.

turning a "zoo" into a "nice place."

The 19-year educational veteran outlined his own beliefs.

"I am a very strong advocate of the comprehensive nature of the high school," he said. "I believe that any community should offer programs in high school for all the students who attend.

Jarvis, who spent a number of years at Charlestown High School as a "desegregation expert," said he sees the principalship as a managerial position.

Tom Davis, the principal of Westbury High School in Houston, Texas told the committee, "I'm ready to come home."

He taught in New England before going to Houston five years ago to manage a school of 2,300 students.

Davis said he prefers the size of Cohasset. "I don't want to be office bound. I want to be able to know the names of the students."

He said his philosophy involves getting to know individuals and building relationships to find the answers to problems.

Changes to zoning laws allow for building growth

(This was one of the essays submitted in The Gilbert Tower Memorial Award writing contest. The essays, written by members of the high school A.P. History class, were reviewed by a panel of judges. The four finalists are being published by The Mariner. Ed)

By Susan Riley

In recent years many changes have taken place in the housing and building industries in Cohasset.

Gilbert Tower

The appearance of several condominum projects, such as those at 100 Pond Street, Cedar Street, and Wheelwright Farm (off Beechwood Street), are something new to this small community. Also, the number of conversions of large houses and apartments into multi-family dwellings and condominiums has increased. These changes are largely the result of major revisions to the town's zoning bylaws. For the first time the town has permitted cluster development which is:

An option which permits an applicant to build single-family (and multi-family) dwellings with reduced lot area and frontage requirements so as to create a development in which the buildings and accessory uses are clustered together into one or more groups with adjacent common open land.

An example of this type of development is the condominium, a term which refers to the ownership of properties rather than the construction of the buildings.

According to former planning board member Patricia Facey, zoning for cluster development was instituted for several reasons. First, this provides an alternate form of subdivisions of land to the standard grid formation. The neighborhood on Fair Oakes Lane is a good example of this standard lay-out of housing lots. These new divisions create variety in the appearance of houses in Cohasset and give buyers more options and flexibility. Also, this new zoning allows for the development of formerly unusable lands, such as wet lands (subject to provisions established by the different town boards). Secondly, this type of development provides for condominium projects and multi-family dwellings which are generally appealing to the elderly or busy professionals who may not want the responsibility for outside maintenance and all common lands. Owners are responsible for the insides of their own home and must contribute equally to the association. A disadvantage to this type of development, particularly in the case of conversion from apartments to condominiums (over which the town has no authority because it involves ownership, not construction), is that those who do not wish to buy or cannot afford to do so are left out. This leads to another problem, that of low income housing, which is lacking in Cohasset. A third reason for permitting this type of development is that it cuts down on the number of roads and access ways needed, thus lowering costs in building, utilities, etc. Also, when a cluster project is proposed the town planning board has authority over the design of the buildings as well as where they are to be located. In standard cases the town has control over where the buildings will be constructed only, not how it will be designed.

Many requirements, concerning the number of rooms in a home, the amount of open land, the septic systems, etc., must be met before the town boards will give their approval for the construction of a new project. However, the new cluster development and other zoning bylaws clearly establish these regulations, and if they are met new condominium projects and multi-family conversions will continue to appear. In the next several years the face of Cohasset may change drastically, as the new laws are put to further use.

School Supt. Eugene Crowell and Louis Walinsky display the Gilbert Tower Memorial Award plaque.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

The world according to Secretary Salvucci

My dessert for habitually doubting the essence of Massachusetts Transportation Secretary Frederick Salvucci's life's work was a recent hour and forty-five minute personal interview with the secretary. Moreover, the interview took place on the day last month when one of his commuter trains rear-ended a freight train in Brighton.

There Salvucci sat in perfect calm explaining his views to one of his more dubious critics during a day that for his transportation watch was the equivalent of Pearl Harbor. At one point he excused himself to deal with some aspect of the crisis, saying that if I would stick around he would give me some more time. He returned half an hour later, his train of thought intact. One needn't come to agree with a single transportation tenet of such a gracious, intelligent person to appreciate that he brings honor to his toil, to his watch, and to his governor.

What I would like to do in writing up our conversation, insofar as I have the ability to, is to put myself in the secretary's mind, to refrain from making my usual arguments, and to give you our transportation problems as he sees them, not as I see them. In some instances (such as his reasons for eschewing masterplans) I was impressed with his answers; in others (such as his comments about curb-cuts) I was not. But I think one who has extended both me and the eleven communities I try to speak for a great courtesy deserves to have his answers stand alone and without immediate diminishment. Incidentally, trying to restate the arguments of one with whom one disagrees is an excellent mental exercise, the intellectual form of the Golden Rule, and it is something none of us do enough.

Any lingering doubt I had that the depression of Boston's Central Artery is central to Salvucci's transportation toil was quickly dispelled on stepping into his office. Whereas some executives decorate their offices with pictures of their children, whereas I display a Lionel train and a grungy 25-year-old soccer ball inscribed "Nobles 1-Milton 0" in mine, Salvucci has covered an entire wall in his office with a huge panoramic color photograph of the Central Artery from the Fort Point Channel to Charlestown.

In such a surrounding talk of the Central Artery easily dominated our conversation. Salvucci asserts that any decision affecting the Artery should be made on information, not philosophy; and he believes he has the information to justify the multi-billion dollar task of depressing it. Boston, he says, has the most concentrated downtown in the country, and the artery, which serves the downtown, is the most overused section of interstate highway in the country. The present elevated structure, built in the 1950s, must soon be repaired or, like New York's West Side Highway, it will have to be closed before it crumbles.

The options, therefore, are to spend millions rebuilding the present inadequate road and be saddled with 1-hour per day tie-ups in the 1990s; or to redesign it and realign it in such a way that it will function efficiently in our time. The proposed depressed highway could be built while the present Artery remains open, thus avoiding a decade of chaos during construction. Most of the new Artery would be "decked," i.e. covered, thus reconnecting Boston's historic downtown with its historic waterfront.

In Salvucci's view a four-lane third harbor tunnel connecting Logan Airport with routes 3-south and 90-west is central to making his proposed realignment of the Artery work. If this part of the project is omitted even the realigned Artery will not cope well with the traffic of the 1990s. On the other hand, Salvucci argues that were the third tunnel built without realigning the Artery, Artery traffic would back up beyond the Fort Point Channel where the new tunnel would begin, thus clogging its entrance and undoing the good it is intended to accomplish. In short, neither the Artery realignment nor the third tunnel will work without the other.

The argument (which I have often made) that billions spent on the Artery would preempt needed transportation projects throughout the rest of the state is false Salvucci says because federal moneys designated for this project since 1981 cannot be shifted to other Massachusetts projects. The Artery project's real competition comes not from the South Shore or the Berkshires, it comes from places like Seattle and Phoenix. If we bicker about the Artery long enough we could lose those federal moneys to other cities and states touting their own less justifiable highway projects.

On Southeastern Massachusetts transportation issues. . .

Salvucci does not agree that the South Shore has received short shrift from the state. The Southeast Expressway has had a $65 million facelift. The Red Line has been extended to Quincy and Braintree. The return of commuter rail is seriously contemplated. As to the last, Salvucci believes that the real reason commuter rail did not get revived in the 1960s was not due to our lack of influence as a region, but rather because of Quincy's dominant influence within the region. Quincy saw revived commuter rail as a threat to its own desire for rapid transit, and that is the reason, Salvucci suspects (the relevant decisions actually came during the Peabody and Volpe administrations so he cannot be certain) that the commuter rail right of way through Quincy was needlessly obliterated by rapid transit construction.

Why are we looking at only three rights of way in restoring commuter rail? The point is to get something on the ground and running. Once the "Rubicon" (that is to say the Neponset) is crossed, all possibilities open up. Why are we not looking to service to Cape Cod, Fall River, and New Bedford? Those places may not want rail service and if they get the right to sign off on rail restoration the whole project could be killed. On the other hand, if we succeed in getting service to Scituate, Plymouth, and Middleborough, the possibility remains open to go elsewhere. In general, Salvucci said, he shies away from masterplans because in his experience opposition to a single point in a plan can threaten entire projects.

Why are we proposing a 60-m.p.h. top speed? Higher speeds are possible in the future. Why are we not retaining the rights to abandoned rail rights-of-way? We are. Salvucci's secretariat must approve any building permit over a former right-of-way. (It is not certain whether the law under which this is the case applies to rights-of-way sold off before 1974.) How can a labor strike be averted on future South Shore passenger service? By making rail personnel state employees subject to state rather than federal law when disputes arise. Under state law workers are subject to binding arbitration and do not have the right to strike.

What about the east-west roads in Plymouth County. New curb-cuts (curb-cuts are where private roads and driveways join public roads) should be restricted and major state investment on roads such as Rte. 44 and Rte. 139 should be withheld until the towns through which these roads run have comprehensive land-use plans that control commercial development. Salvucci also asserted that under Chapter 90 towns have state moneys available to improve these roads on their own.

Lastly, on the grave question of bringing the Braves back to Boston, Salvucci sagaciously agrees with me that this is a matter of pressing concern to us all. He assured me that he will disport himself with daily displays of dismay at the dastardly dislocation of our National League franchise to the dismal Milwaukee and the disrelishing Atlanta.

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

'All of my best friends were . . .'

I never met a Jew until I was 18 years old. My rural Ohio hometown was like Lake Wobegon with smokestacks. The only religious minority I knew was the occasional Jehovah's Witness.

That changed when I went to college, 20 years ago this fall. I attended Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tennessee, largely because it was a good school and a little because it had a good basketball team. I knew it was in the South, but it never occurred to me that the South was much different from any other part of the country.

Steve Blumenthal was from West Orange, New Jersey, a pre-law student who lived in my dorm. We became friends. He was Jewish.

Soon fraternity rush began. The rules required all freshmen to visit every house. We were arranged in alphabetical order and divided into groups of 25.

There were 14 fraternities and after three or four visits I noticed a pattern. I was being ignored. Most of the time Steve and I spent the whole time by ourselves. Occasionally we were joined by Neal Borovitz or Larry Blumberg.

Nobody seemed interested in my joining their fraternity. While I wasn't the coolest guy on campus, I wasn't the biggest bozo, either. I saw other guys being courted, why not I?

I discussed this with Steve, who was also being ignored, but didn't seem to mind. He explained the social facts of life.

"They think you're Jewish," he said. "Most of the houses are Gentile houses. No Jews allowed. There are two Jewish fraternities, Zeta Beta Tau and Alpha Epsilon Pi. I'm going to join the Pi's. A guy I know from New Jersey is a member."

He carefully explained that Berger is a "Jewish name." I had never heard of such a thing.

O.K., I thought. If everybody thinks I'm Jewish, things ought to be different when we visit Zeta Beta Tau. Wrong. I was ignored there, too.

"Simple," Steve explained again. "The Zebes only take Jewish guys. They make sure they know who is Jewish and who isn't.

What was I supposed to do, wear a "not Jewish" sign? Maybe a little cross on my lapel?

Finally we went to Alpha Epsilon Pi. I met Steve's friend from home. He didn't care if I was Jewish or not. Neither did the other brothers. After days of being ignored, it felt great.

Shortly thereafter I became a Pi pledge, as did Steve and Neal Borovitz and Larry Blumberg. There were three Gentiles among the 12 in the pledge class, but nobody was counting.

I soon learned that tolerance has been thrust upon the Pi's by financial necessity. The Zebes had all the prestige, all the wealthy Southern Jews. They were accepted by the other houses and were just as exclusive. The Pi's survived by taking any warm body, regardless of religion.

The Pi's were mostly Yankees, and a lot of us were on scholarship. While the Zebes looked and sounded like everybody else at Vanderbilt, most of the Pi's looked and sounded like Woody Allen.

Happily, the enforced tolerance soon grew into a higher appreciation as the brothers came to see the advantages of a more inclusive brotherhood.

I had a great time being part of that house, but there were some questions. Several of the guys back in the dorm couldn't understand why I would join a Jewish house, even if it was the only one open to me.

I also had to tell my father.

My Dad never spoke about Jews one way or the other. They never came up in our society. He wanted what was best for me and I was afraid he might not approve. He might think I was inviting a tougher social situation than I needed to.

But he never said a discouraging word. Years later I discovered why.

In basic training in World War II the sergeants thought my father was Jewish. He was given a hard time, the worst details. When they discovered he was Lutheran the hard times stopped. My Dad understood what was happening to me.

In the years following I found more discrimination and prejudice, and looked to my fraternity as a sanctuary.

I have vivid memories of the Campus Crusade for Christ, a group of evangelical students who were mostly members of the richest fraternities and sororities. They would try to convert my brothers and me. They still hadn't looked past my name.

In my junior year we pledged the first black student that had ever joined a Vanderbilt fraternity. I wish I could tell you it was done unanimously and with joy.

It wasn't.

It was tough and it got ugly. Friendships and confidences were shattered. But he became a brother. The cost was high and I was among those who felt it had to be paid.

I was president of the fraternity my senior year, the first Gentile president. Nobody cared about that. It was more important to keep the house together.

It was 1970. One brother was president of Young Americans for Freedom, a conservative political group. Another was head of Students for a Democratic Society, a radical left group.

We had to find ways to put away our differences and work together. We didn't always succeed, but trying was the most important part of my education.

Recently I mailed several of my columns and readers' responses to them, to my old friend Steve, who is now a lawyer in Washington. He wrote, "You're the only Christian I know that other Christians treat like a Jew."

I take that as a compliment.

YOUR YARD'S BEST FRIEND

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

Lunch for the hubby & summer vacation ideas

"What's for lunch?" is a question not exactly music to the ears when one has hardly recovered after just getting the kitchen together after the breakfast scene. It's also a question asked of our readers a few weeks ago, in hopes of suggestions for the meal many wives had skipped over lightly before their husband's retirement.

For years she had the place to herself, looking forward to Monday while husband and children groaned.

Now, the man who loves food and would search out exotic foods in markets and restaurants during his lunch hour while at work, thinks lunchtime should be a big production.

If one of your husband's hobbies is gardening, later on, when his veggies are ripe, you might both enjoy Renee Shepherd's recipe; he because it's nourishing and you because it's so easy to prepare.

GARDEN GAZPACHO

1/2 c. each:
finely chopped green pepper and cucumbers
1 c. finely chopped, peeled tomatoes
1/4 c. finely chopped green onions
1 T. chopped parsely
3 cloves minced garlic
2 T. minced chives
3 to 4 T. tarragon vinegar
2 T. olive oil
1 tsp. salt, 1/4 tsp. pepper
1 tsp. Worcestersire sauce
1/2 tsp. Tabasco sauce
3 c. tomato juice

Mix in blender and chill well. Serves 4 to 8, depending on appetites.

Some of us have learned the hard way that there are certain things that are easier to do oneself. If you have a "messy" in the house, the kitchen becomes a disaster scene if said person is let loose to prepare a meal or snack. It's quicker and less p ainful to do it oneself. Getting "messies" to clean up afterwards is such a problem that Sandra Felton, a 50 year-old high school teacher, in 1981 founded Messies Anonymous, a nonprofit organization that tries to help messy people change their ways. Membership is $5 a year; the Messies Manual is $5.95. There are more than 6,000 members, many women with jobs outside the home.

In her 157-page manual, Mrs. Felton describes the method of maintaining an organized home with what she calls the Mount Vernon Method, used at the home of George Washington in Virginia. There, the whole house is put in order, beginning at the front door and continuing to the right or left throughout the house. The kitchen, considered the most difficult place to straighten up, is done last. You might even leave a copy of the manual in a conspicuous place and see how your kitchen looks if your husband prepares Reanne Rosenhahn's

REDUCING SOUP

1 head cabbage
6 large onions
1 large bunch celery
1 large green pepper
1 can whole tomatoes

Cut vegetables, cover with water, bring to a boil for 10 minutes and simmer 2 1/2 to 3 hours. Reanne notes: "There's lots of vitamins and it's filling."

* * *

Summer vacation looms just over the horizon, a time when the kitchen often echoes to the cry: "There's never anything to eat in this house." Ever since 1890 when a St. Louis doctor invented peanut butter, Americans have eaten nearly 250,000 tons of it yearly. Probably the greatest amount consumed is in the form of peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, so keep the jar handy, for it seems to have a universal appeal. However, if you should make this recipe sent along by Millie Carr, you'd better not leave it around, or you'll never get even a crumb of this

DEEP DARK CHOCOLATE CAKE

1 pkg. devils' food cake mix
4 eggs
1 c. sour cream
3/4 c. water
1/4 c. vegetable oil
pkg. instant chocolate pudding
1 pkg. chocolate chips

Preheat oven to 350°. Place all ingredients except chips in bowl. Mix thoroughly. Add chocolate chips and turn into well-greased Bundt pan. Bake 50 minutes to one hour. Let cool 20 minutes and turn out of pan. When nearly cool, cover with foil. Serve with coffee Kahlua cream.

COFFEE KAHLUA CREAM

1 pint whipping cream
1 T. instant coffee
1/4 c. Kahlua

Whip cream and Kahlua in a chilled bowl. Gradually add coffee and whip until stiff. Serve with cake.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By CLAIRE McDONOUGH

Searching for the Us Generation

The Dragon sighed. "How come we're never really 'with it?' " he asked. "We're never going to get on "Real People" or even People Magazine if we don't do something about our image."

"I'm not sure I know what you mean," I replied. "We have a nice home, lovely children, beautiful grandchildren, our health — what more do you want?"

"I want glamor," he told me, "excitement. Do you realize that all durng the '50s, when "beatniks" were "in" you were up to your knees in pablum and I was trying to work hard enough to make a down payment on a house. Neither of us had time to write poetry that didn't rhyme.

In a generation when women wore long black stockings and white lipstick and everyone hung out in coffee houses talking about how lost they were, our reading material all seemed to involve "The Little Train That Could," "Where the Wild Things Are," and "The Cat in the Hat."

The "lost"things we were seeking were the arm from Mary Claire's Barbie doll, the drill that Jay took so he could make a hole from his room to the bathroom because he wanted to ground his radio, and Eileen's ring that your mother gave her and that she mistakenly let fall down the drain.

"Then came the 60's. Everyone says they were dynamic years. Are you aware that an entire sexual revolution came and went while we were singing "Billy Goats Gruff" to Maureen, trying to get Kevin to surrender the piece of roast beef he used to carry in his mouth, relatively undamaged, for three days at a time, and wishing we knew why the washing machine never returned all the socks we put in it?

"We never had time to burn anything. Well, you burned a few things, but they were all food."

He sighed again. "The sixties got even more heated. People took to the streets demanding freedom and justice. They took the decision-making process back from big government. They chose environmental protection; they opted for peace. Our decisions, in the main, concerned whether to switch from cloth to disposable diapers for Pat and Larry. Where to put the wading pool. Where to put the new leaching field. And we still hadn't solved the mystery of the socks in the washer."

"Did you like the '70s any better?" I asked.

He looked at me. "What do you think? The 'Me Generation' definitely wasn't us.

"Everybody who was anybody was 'doing his own thing.' So were we, but our things was scraping Breida and Skip's playdough off the only decent chair in the house and painting the living room light brown so the peanut butter wouldn't show. And buying everybody's socks in the same color because we'd given up on trying to get complete pairs back from the washing machine."

I nodded. "Funny it should take us three decades to figure that one out. How are we doing now? We haven't had a baby in 18 years."

"I know," the Dragon agreed. "But somehow I still don't think we're 'with it.' In your heart of hearts, do you really believe we have what it takes to be Yuppies?"

"I'll have to admit we blew that one," I replied. "But tell me the truth. What do you wish we had been doing instead of all that reading of nursery rhymes, singing, diapering, spooning of pablum, searching, scraping and painting?"

"I've given the matter considerable thought," he responded.

"If I had it to do over again, I probably would invest every penny I could get my hands on in socks stocks. Either that, or take our kids to the blacksmith and have them permanently shod. Other than that, I would have had the same darn kids and gone in for the same spooning, changing, scraping, et cetera. But I still wish there had been an "Us" generation.

Breida looked up from her magazine.

"Guess what," she said. "A polling company recently asked 600 middle-aged Americans what they most wanted out of life. Five hundred, 87 of them said they wanted a nice home, lovely children, beautiful grandchildren, and their health."

The Dragon looked stunned. "Hot damn," he breathed. "We're trendsetters."

ANGLER'S CORNER

Over 80 local anglers registered and fished in the First Annual Hummingbird Bass Classic held on Saturday and Sunday, May 17-18.

Twenty largemouth bass over three pounds were weighed in alive and released during the two-day tournament.

The sponsors of the tournament, Adams Bait & Tackle, and Technsonic Industries, manufacturers of the Hummingbird fish finders, praised the sportsmanship of the participants.

Bill Smith, owner of Adams Bait & Tackle, said, "We finally got a break in the weather which resulted in excellent fishing opportunities, maybe the best of the season. We had a very competitive tournament with many good anglers competing for over $800 in cash and prizes.

The age of the anglers ranged from senior citizens to a knowledgable eight year-old. We really had a cross section of the public involved in this tournament."

George Mitchell of Brockton caught the winning fish, a seven pound eight ounce largemouth, caught in Muddy Pond in Plymouth. Mitchell took home a Hummingbird LCR fish finder, a $100 gift certificate, and the Hummingbird trophy for his effort.

Dana Drake of Weymouth captured second prize, a Shimano bait casting outfit, and Adams gift certificate, and a trophy with a six pound seven ounce largemouth caught in Monponsett Lake. Jeff McKinnon of Whitman took third place, barely edging out Bob Ord on a tie breaker.

All proceeds from this tournament go to support Adams Bait & Tackle's "Teach a Kid to Fish" program which provide a rod and reel to each Wolf and Bear Scout in Pembroke's Pack 104.

Adams will also sponsor a Kids Day on Sunday, June 22. This fun day is open to all local youths and their families. Plans are set for a kids fishing derby and a cookout free to all participants.

For further information stop by Adams Bait & Tackle on Route 139 in Pembroke or call 826-8341.

Mariner Newspapers will be publishing a special "Summer Focus" supplement June 18-19. This supplement will include lists and stories of events of special interest to the general public. Civic and nonprofit groups and organizations are invited to submit items by the deadline of Tuesday, June 10. Send the items to Editor Mike Berger, Box 682, Marshfield, Mass. 02050.

Major bank changes coming for the Village

There'll be some changes along Cohasset Village.

The Cohasset Savings Bank announced last week the purchase of land and property along Brook Street and South Main Street, from the Elm Street bank around the corner to the Central Market.

And the South Shore Bank has petitioned the state banking commission to vacate its Village branch office. If the petition is approved, the office will leave the familiar South Main Street site within 60 days.

State Banking Commissioner Paul Bulman said this week the petition by South Shore Bank has been duly advertised. The state is awaiting public comment on the petition.

"Thus far," he confirmed, "there has been no comment from the public. The last time it was advertised was June 4. If there is no comment within two weeks of that date, the commission will likely approve the petition."

Bulman confirmed the bank was consolidating its Village and Rte. 3A offices "for demographic" reasons.

Bank vice president Duncan Booth said the data provided on the two Cohasset offices demonstrated a steady increase in the Rte. 3A office, and no growth in the Village branch.

"It really has to do with a number of factors," Booth said. "Simply, there has virtually been no growth in terms of activity and profitability in the Village office. The Rte. 3A branch has grown steadily."

The reason for the growth, Booth explained, was the expanded number and wider variety of services offered at the Rte. 3A location. The drive-up window and the Saturday hours have attracted many customers.

Probably the largest single reason for the increased customer activity at Rte. 3A, is the automatic teller machine, Booth noted. Young people in particular, he said, "have taken to the ATM's like a duck to water."

Principal likes to be around people

The new principal of Cohasset High School is an admitted "people person."

Mary Ellen Gallagher converses without hesitation, she listens with attentiveness. "Maybe it's because of where I grew up (Flatbush, Brooklyn, N.Y.) I like people. Growing up in the city is congested, but there are a lot of advantages. Growing up, I didn't really think about it. But I definitely like to be around people," she said.

The 5'11" administrator enjoys talking about educational philosophy, the need for curriculum update, and administrative policies.

But with a smile on her sunburnt face, Gallagher enumerates her variety of "outside interests."

She admits a bit easier now than six weeks ago, she recently turned 40 years. The administrator also recently moved to Weymouth, "a first-time suburbanite" after being born and raised in the city.

A native New Yorker, Gallagher attended St. Joseph's College in that state. She traveled to the Boston area in 1970 and lived in Jamaica Plain, the Back Bay and Dorchester before moving to the South Shore.

"I like the city," she says. "I was always involved in neighborhood groups, and I got to know my neighbors."

In Jamaica Plain, Gallagher organized the senior citizens of the neighborhood. "We had a bridge group, along with a few people my own age. We'd pick up the older people because we switched places every week. There were no refreshments, because the elderly really couldn't afford it. It really was a great night."

When rents escalated in the Back Bay, Gallagher moved once again to Dorchester. She bought a three-family home in the Adams Village section. With help from friends, she rehabilitated the large house.

The First Parish Unitarian Church on Cohasset Common.

You're invited to First Parish restoration party

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

You are invited to a party.

The First Parish Church in Cohasset is celebrating the completion of restoration work on the church exterior at a 4:30 p. m. service, Sunday.

The Reverend Edward Atkinson described the celebration as "half worship-half open house."

He explained, "We sent invitations to all Town committees and all the churches in town."

Atkinson said he hopes many will attend the free service because "we thought it would be nice to all gather under that roof and sort of remember its origins."

The Meeting House, which was built in 1747 holds much of Cohasset's history. Town Meetings once convened there and it was at one time Cohasset's only house of worship.

"It got into pretty bad shape a year or two ago," he said of the landmark, "so we did a major restoration, stripping it down to bare wood and repainting it.

"We completely rebuilt the south wall," he added, "and put new clapboard on. It was a fairly extensive piece of work."

The reverend said the celebratory service will feature anthems by the church choir as well as a concert by a hand-bell choir.

"That's always fun," he added, "because those bells were given in memory of my predecessor, Rosco Trueblood.

"They're very lovely white chapel bells from England and we have a group that has been rehearsing with them and is prepared to show them off.

"Participating in the service," he added, "we will have some of the different clergy in the town and we will have resolutions of greetings from town officials.

"There will also be a reception following the service at the Parish House, where light refreshments will be served," he said.

Atkinson added that child care will also be available at the Parish House during the service.

"I so often run into people who say, 'I've seen the building many, many times and I've never been in it,'" he said. "This isn't a partisan occasion; it's just a time when the doors will be open and there will be some music and activity within the building.

"We hope anybody who'd like to see it, who perhaps has never been to it before, will come and enjoy this day with us."

A Sunday victory for grads & Celtics

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

It was a tossup between Sunday's Celtics game and the high school graduation for many parents and graduates, too.

In the end, honoring the Class of 1986 won out, although more than a few radio Walkman's were spotted among the audience and in the processional of graduates as they entered the Music Circus tent sometime in the third period.

As the sky alternated between clouds and brilliant sunlight, the 1986 Cohasset High School graduates walked slowly and formally down the aisles to their front row seats. The girls wore white gowns, the boys were clad in royal blue.

As family members scurried for a nearby seat, inquiring "what's the score?" "what's going on with the game?" the band played a jubilant version of Pomp and Circumstance. In this theatre-in-the-round, it was possible for everyone to have a good view of his favorite graduate.

Following a rousing rendition of The Star Spangled Banner by graduate John Pereira, there was an invocation by Rev. Edward Atkinson of the First Parish Church. Understanding the imminent victory of the Boston Celtics for the 16th time, everyone must realizethesestudents graduate from high school only once, he said.

"Help us to keep our priorities," he prayed, "in the right order."

The minister continued, "May the knowledge enrich their lives and the larger human community. We rejoice for those who aided these men and women and those in the community who supported our schools."

Class president Sandra Best was the first to address

Legal Action about fence

Former Building Inspector Edward Poskus requested assistance from Town Counsel Richard Henderson regarding a fence erected at 11 Beach Street.

Accordinng to Poskus, he requested last August that owners, Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Richards, cut the fence down from six to five feet in height. The current fence height is not in accordance with the town's zoning bylaw.

"It is now nine months later and it has been observed that this has not been accomplished," he wrote in a letter to the Richards.

Poskus requested on May 29 that town counsel "proceed to prosecute this case in accordance with the zoning bylaw."

Health warning

The state Department of Public Health has issued a warning to consumers that Rotaneli frozen pastas are contaminated with salmonella.

In calls to local health departments yesterday afternoon state health officials said all Rotaneli products of all codes should be removed from supermarket shelves and home freezers.

Consumers are advised to return unused portions of the products to the stores where they were purchased.

Because the frozen food is also sold in bulk, hospitals and nursing homes have been advised to check their frozen stocks.

The products should not be consumed by anyone, health officials said.

Lower electric bills

Eastern Edison Co. has filed with the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities (DPU) plans to reduce the cost of electricity by 7.9 percent.

"By taking advantage of the anticipated continued decrease in the cost of oil used as a fuel to generate electricity, we're able to reduce the bills of Eastern Edison Co. customers to their lowest levels since March 1983," said Allan K. Hamer, president. "We are very pleased to be able to say the cost of electricity today is 15 percent lower than it was at its peak in 1984."

New fuel and oil conservation adjustments filed to take effect in June would cut the monthly bill of a residential customer using 500 kilowatt-hours (kwh) of electricity a month by $3.87.

An Eastern Edison residential customer using 500 kwh monthly would be billed $45.14 starting in June if the DPU approves the new charges, compared with $49.01 in May.

Eastern Edison Co. provides electric service to more than 155,000 customers in the Brockton and Fall River areas. It is one of two retail electric utilities of Eastern Utilities Associates (EUA), an investor-owned electric utility holding company. Other EUA companies are Blackstone Valley Electric, Montaup Electric Co. and EUA Service Corp.

New hazardous waste member

The board of health recently appointed former board chairman Barbara Kern to the Hazardous Materials Advisory Committee. The term expires June 30, 1987.

Invitation from Scituate

Scituate selectmenn invited Cohasset selectmen chairman Maryane McArthur or another member of the board to join Scituate's 350th anniversary parade.

The invitation, extended by Scituate selectman Richard Bowen, requested the participation of a Cohasset selectman in the July 26 parade.

Studds at dedication ceremony

Saturday, June 14, Congressman Gerry E. Studds will participate in dedication and flag-raising ceremonies for a new memorial in Hingham to the 59 Commonwealth veterans still unaccounted for in Southeast Asia. The dedication ceremonies will begin at 1 p.m. at Harbor Park, directly adjacent to the Hingham Rotary at Hingham Harbor.

Studds will then hold Open Meetings from 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. at the Small Barnes Auditorium in Hingham; and from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m. at the Cohasset Town Hall.

Bewitched and bothered

A 21 year-old woman from Malden who said she is a modern-day witch, requested that selectmen deny Warner Brothers the right to film in Cohasset. She said the movie, which will be based on the John Updike novel, "Witches of Eastwick," will "keep these old beliefs alive . . .to have people think of us witches as old hags with warts on our noses, riding broomsticks, and eating babies."

Contrary to that long-held notion, Jenifer C. Cosgrove of Malden said "I am 21 years-old, rarely get a pimple, drive a Camaro, and prefer pizza to babies."

The production of this movie, Cosgrove stated, will bring back the fears and prejudices about witches. "If Warner Brothers was turned down in Rhode Island, doesn't that mean something is wrong with the whole idea of this production, especially in the New England area with all it's witch history? A movie like this could tarnish our goodness in the public eye which we fought too hard for in the past," she stated in her letter to selectmen.

Cosgrove concluded the communication by requesting selectmen deny the right to film "Witches of Eastwick" in Cohasset.

Peek at the past

Last week's photo was guessed correctly by A.J. Antoine. It was Thomas Loney and his Jerusalem swill cart. This was the first private garbage collection in Cohasset, started in the late 1800's by this former slave. Loney ran away from a southern plantation, joined the Navy during the Civil War and later settled in Cohasset.

Major bank changes coming for Cohasset Village...

"These machines are a fact of life now," he said this week. "Especially with the younger people who use them as their primary source of banking. The older people are not as attracted, and use them only as a secondary source of banking. But all three elements have made the Rte. 3A office more attractive to our customers."

The Rte. 3A branch has been at that Tedeschi Plaza location for more than 10 years. That's slightly longer than the time the Village branch has been open.

Assuming approval will be granted by the banking commission, Booth said the staff members in the Village office will be transferred to other South Shore Bank locations.

Office manager Ruth Mullin will be going to the Rte. 3A location as a "permanent" part of the staff there. "Unless she wants to go somewhere else," Booth said, "we envision her staying at the Rte. 3A office."

Part time Village employee Joan McMannis will be transferred to the other Cohasset office. Greg Pownell, the fulltime Village staffer, has already transferred to the Rte. 3A office. "But we feel that Greg will probably move onto another South Shore location," Booth added.

The bank vice president explained there is a push among banks to consolidate. In an effort to remain competitive, he said, all banks are looking to consolidate their assets while providing the most services for its customers.

"This is the first time in my memory that we are vacating a bank office," he said. "It is a something we are not familiar with. But in today's competitive environment, every bank is looking to see where their resources can best be employed."

If approval is granted by the state without restrictions, Booth predicted the bank will leave the premises within 60 days. The state usually gives a bank one year after approval to open a bank office, he explained. If everything is in order, the South Shore Bank could leave the Village this summer.

A longtime Village neighbor, Cohasset Savings Bank, recently purchased the corner property along the rear of the Elm Street bank.

The land extends on South Main Street to the Curtis Company and includes the vacant lot formerly occupied by a drugstore which burned in 1963. The purchase was made from Louis and Joan Bravo, although a price was not disclosed.

The block of buildings, once known as the "Bristol Block" when it was owned by the late Dr. Burt Bristol, is currently occupied by the Central Market, Kit and Kaboodle and Dependable Cleaners. There are also seven apartments on the second and third floors of the buildings.

'Cats' makes a return engagement to the area June 12-14

When the Children's Ballet Workshop performed their version of "Cats" two years ago, it was so widely acclaimed they knew that they would have to do it again. They will, June 12, 13 and 14 at Hingham High School.

"Cats" will be the third short ballet on the program on those three evenings, combining with "Slavonic Dances" and Hans Christian Anderson's, "The Nightingale" to ensure another memorable showcase for the talents of the Workshop.

"Slavonic Dances" has been choreographed by Victor LaCasse of the Boston Ballet Company, to music by Antonin Dvorak, who based the melodies on the folk music of his native Czechoslovakia. LaCasse who has worked with the senior members of the Workshop, is enthusiastic about the results of the collaboration. "The dancers are so great, that it's hard to believe that they are children," he said. "And combining their talents with Dvorak's music results in something very special."

"The Nightingale" promises to be a spectacular ballet with Oriental characters and their parasols, robes and fans and other colorful attire. The nightingale herself is danced by Christine Ciccone, who has been magical in rehearsals.

"The performance will close with "Cats", which is appropriate since there is absolutely no way to follow it", Nan Keating said. "We've added some music and additional parts, and we think it's even more exciting than the first time.

Beth Vages who choreographed the original version of "Les Chats"(Cats) two years ago, has made some minor changes. "I've tried to relate the dancing to the strengths of the cast," she stated. "That way we capitalize on their individual talents.

Performances by the Children's Ballet Workshop begin at 7:30 p.m. June 12, June 13, and June 14 at Hingham High School. Tickets will be available at the door and by calling 749-3737.

Residents charged in Norwell break-ins

Five Cohasset residents, including a female juvenile, are facing assorted charges in connection with a string of housebreaks in Norwell. Police said the group is also under investigation by Marshfield and Scituate police for breaks in their towns and that Cohasset would be seeking warrants.

Norwell Det. Sgt. Donald Bongarzone said the five are charged in connection with five recent housebreaks in Norwell that resulted in thefts of about $15,000. "They mostly stole jewelry and cash," he said, "which they were trading for drugs."

He said the arrests have led to another investigation into the source of drugs in another town. He declined to be more specific saying the case was still under investigation.

Charged were: Wayne R. Hollis, 19, 159 Sohier St., Cohasset, three counts of breaking and entering in the daytime, three counts of larceny, two counts of malicious damage to personal property, one count of larceny of a firearm, one count of unlawful possession of a firearm; Lawrence W. Ash, 18, 90 Doane St., Cohasset, five counts of breaking and entering in the daytime, one count of attempted breaking and entering in the daytime, larceny of a firearm, unlawful possession of a firearm, five counts of larceny and two counts of malicious destruction of personal property; Edward A. Grafton, 17, 20 Hammond Ave., Cohasset, five counts of breaking and entering in the daytime, one count of attempted breaking and entering in the daytime, five counts of larceny, one count of larceny of a firearm and three counts of malicious destruction of personal property.

The female juvenile was charged with one count of breaking and entering in the daytime and malicious destruction of personal property. The male juvenile was charged with five counts of breaking and entering in the daytime, five counts of larceny, two counts of malicious destruciton of property and one count of attempted breaking and entering in the daytime.

Sgt. Bongarzone said the group was charged in connection with Norwell housebreaks at: 291 Mt. Blue St., 200 Prospect St., 341 Lincoln St., 321 Winter St., and 115 Winter St. Twenty-four different warrants were sought against them after the investigation, Bongarzone said, which was conducted in conjunction with Cohasset Det. Brian Cogill.

"We believe they're responsible for breaks in the four towns (including Marshfield and Scituate)," Bongarzone said.

The case broke last week, Bongarzone said, when someone came forward with stolen property. He said members of the group had been under investigation for several weeks.

He added that the investigation is continuing.

MOVING NEXT WINTER?

Don't be fooled into thinking that nobody buys a house during the winter. Smart buyers do! When you go out to look at houses next January or February, you won't have autumn leaves or spring flowers to add to each home's appeal. If you bring your imagination, however, you can choose among some terrific values and move in just in time to enjoy the azaleas and tulips for yourself.

House hunting isn't always easy during the winter months. You may have to bundle up, and you may even have to slosh through some bad weather. Is it worth it? Generally, sellers who list their property during the winter are strongly motivated to sell. They may have been transferred, or they may have found another house to buy. This motivation and a somewhat small pool of buyers can add up to considerable savings or more favorable terms for people who are imaginative and hardy enough to take advantage of the cold weather values.

The first step toward learning about the exciting winter market is to find an agent who can handle the cold as well as you can. At HOME CENTER REALTY our all-weather professionals are ready to serve your real estate needs. Please call us at 749-8833, or stop by our offices at 57 Water St., in Hingham.

Firefighters' overtime fuels budget talk

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The Cohasset Advisory Board and Fire Chief Daniel Brock engaged in heated discussion Tuesday night regarding the rate of overtime pay to firefighters.

Article 25 in the warrant for the June 23 special Town Meeting requests the Town vote to transfer $51,779 from available funds to the Fire Department budget for overtime expenditures.

Among 24 firemen, that figure averages to more than $2,000 per man in annual overtime pay."The reasons why it got so bad this year," Brock explained, "when they went to Town Meeting last year, from what I can find in the records, everything was based on the previous year's rates.

"When they finally signed the contract," he added, "they did an adjustment in the account of about $52,000 in salaries, but I think they totally overlooked the effect the six percent increase had on overtime, and there was no money added to the budget for it."

Another factor that influenced the overtime account, Brock said, was that a full-time firefighter was serving light duty.

"He was out for most, or all of the year I guess, which has put a burden on it, because it leaves me one shift short." The chief estimated the cost at $30,000.

"As long as they maintain their present minimum manning of five men," he explained, "then at any time any of those go on vacation or somebody's out sick, it throws it off; it brings a man in on overtime."

Brock said the Cohasset Fire Department suffered three injured firemen last summer, where men were out for three weeks or more. And the hurricane last September cost $9,000 in overtime pay.

"It's a negotiable item with the union. So, the negotiations come up again this fall, or any time the union is willing to negotiate."

"The overtime problem up until February," he explained, "averaged a little over $2,000 per week. But in the last ten weeks, we've been down close to $1,700.

"The other thing that's making it difficult right now," he added, "is we're entering the peak vacation period. I've got a man off each shift right now through the summer."

Brock said, normally with six men at the station, such a situation would not require overtime allotments, but because of the light duty problem, overtime has become necessary.

"The key to the problem here," said board member Arne Gjesteby, "is of course, the contract with the minimum manning. That says we have to have five men on duty at all times."

"The five men were put in when they had seven men per shift," Brock said. "They went from seven to six men per shift without any change in operating procedure. So, what they traded was about $90,000 for four men's pay, for $50,000 to $60,000 in overtime pay."

"So the question is, what shall we do in the future?" Gjesteby said. "Should we get away from this five-man manning and wait on the Town deciding how many people we want to have there at all times?"

"It's a negotiable item with the union," the chief offered. "So, the negotiations come up again this fall, or any time the union is willing to negotiate.

"Yeah, but I don't think they'd be willing to do that," Gjesteby countered, "because with that question, the only way we can make an important change is up front in negotiation."

"Right," Brock said, "but the problem is your liability. To change the manning card without some sort of reasoning behind it other than to cut overtime, would be dangerous.

"If someone had a serious fire," he explained, "and for some reason one engine didn't go, I would expect the Town would be liable for any damage that may occur.

"What they've gone down to," he said, "is what they call a two engines and a ladder running card. That is a standard minimum running card.

"Probably why it was accepted," he added, "and I wasn't there for the negotiations, the lawyer probably recommended the Town accept it because that is the standard minimum."

Brock explained, "As liability goes, there's what you call a standard of care. The Town has a set standard of care by the service provided.

"You can change it, but it will have to be changed with reason," he warned. "You have to know where you're going and why. I think if you were to change it just to save money, and that were your sole reason for doing it, the Town would be open to some sort of liability."

Brock explained, because many call firefighters work outside of town during the day, they would not be a reliable safety net were the full-time staff reduced.

"Even on a box alarm, he said, "the turnout at 11 a. m. is at times, none."

"Well, there must be a way to change it there," Gjesteby objected, "I mean, what you're saying now is that you could never lower it."

"No," the chief replied, "you can do what you want. I'm just saying you have to be aware of a level of risk that you've established."

"You can do what you want. I'm just saying you have to be aware of a level of risk that you've established."

Board member Jane Goedecke asked, "Assuming that our light duty situation normalized itself, and you don't have to deal with that, you have all able-bodied people working, what would you expect the annual overtime rate to be?"

"I think I'm still comfortable with the $53,000 that we went in with," Brock said.

Concerning Article 25, Gjesteby declared, "I'm going to vote against it, although we're probably going to have to pay it eventually.

"But I think somebody has to make the statement that even when you don't count overtime, the Fire Department is costing us too damn much money."

Gjesteby suggested the selectmen should form a committee to study the Fire Department.

"Is it what we really need?" he queried, "Or is it something that came in under the direction of the firemen?

"I don't think the firemen should decide what kind of fire protection this town should have. The townspeople should do that."

Board member Dick Horn was less optimistic.

"There's no way we can find a facility within this government to deal with that," he said.

Gjesteby agreed. "The selectmen will never take this up because they have to get re-elected every three years. They cannot afford to take up this matter."

"That's right," Horn said. "It's a motherhood issue."

Board member Denis Rossi dissented.

"I disagree," he said. "If it's a popular issue, somebody should be able to get on the Board of Selectmen and implement it."

"It may be popular with the people," Gjesteby

Zoning board reviews Jerusalem Rd. plans

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The advisory board Thursday took residents on a walk through the tangled forest of Cohasset zoning, as Victor Shapiro of 580 Jerusalem Road sought a variance to build a house on his property.

Several neighbors wrote letters of endorsement and others showed up to voice their support of Shapiro's plan to merge two lots he owns adjacent to his house and build a small house.

Edward and Kathleen Fox of 8 Black Rock Road objected. They believed town zoning would prevail in their favor.

"We've been here a couple of years," Mrs. Fox told the board, "and although I don't want to upset Mr. Shapiro, because we like him very much as a neighbor, I just feel that according to the zoning bylaws, that lot is not allowed to be built on."

She added, "That was one of the questions we asked when we purchased our house. We were told what the zoning requirements were in the area we're in."

Fox contested the board's finding that the combined lots are legally roomy enough, even for a "small" house.

"You said that combining the two lots would meet the requirement of 15,000 square feet," she asked, challenging the findings of board chairman Myrna Putziger, "but according to a letter in the board of appeals' office, that lot is only 14,400 square feet."

"Mr. Shapiro's house is on that lot created in the plan," Putziger replied, "lot E, which is 14,400 square feet. But the vacant lots at the corner, lots F and G together are more than 15,000 square feet."

"Why doesn't the land there have to conform to the 35,000 square-foot minimum in the town's zoning bylaws?" Fox queried.

"There's provision in the bylaw," Putziger explained, "that has been in the bylaw since zoning was first enacted in this town. It was meant to preserve the buildability of lots which had been created before the bylaws were adopted and the criteria was that the lot had been created and shown on a plan pre-dating town zoning."

Shapiro, a longtime Cohasset resident, bought the lots in 1952, several years before zoning was adopted.

"The third condition," Putziger explained, is they not be owned in conjunction with the immediately adjacent land or if they are owned with immediately adjacent land, they must satisfy certain minimum square-footage requirements."

She added, "If when Mr. Shapiro had bought the land, he had placed lots F and G in the name of his wife, son or any name other than his own, he would not even have had to come here."

"There's probably very little land in Cohasset that isn't old enough that it hasn't been divided at some time into some sort of lot," Fox speculated, "whether it's buildable or perkable or whatever else.

"Doesn't that sort of negate any update of the zoning laws then?" she asked. "Almost anybody could go back and say, 'Well, at the time I purchased this it passed zoning.

"Why do we have meetings then," she asked, "and upgrade these bylaws? And how are we going to protect the land in certain areas if we want to preserve the feeling that we have, that we want to have in our town, if we're going talk our way around them?"

"I think it's a legislative judgment that the bylaw reflects," Putziger said. "It's a compromise as I understand it between those who didn't want to adopt any zoning in Cohasset and those who did."

She added, "The compromise was that if lots had been created by that time, those lots would remain buildable under certain stated conditions.

"New and updated bylaws," she explained, "really relate to newly created lots, as there are subdivisions created in town."

Putziger concluded "There are whole parts of the town which have been governed by new regulations, but there is this specific grandfather provision that has been in our zoning since it was first adopted."

The board will most likely grant Shapiro's variance at their next meeting.

Advisors approve fire overtime argued, "but there's a very strong group of people, lots of family and close friends. And they're going to fight tooth and nail against any changes.

"I'll tell you what happened with the Ambulance Study Committee," he recalled. "They were there, half the Fire Department at every meeting, watching everything we did.

"They were the only people that came," he added. "The public should have had much more interest in it than the people who happen to work in the Fire Department."

"Well you're answering the question," Horn said, "because the ambulance section is probably one of the key sections that you could discontinue to save money. That's a very easy action we could take and the Town couldn't deal with that.

"We're not going to be able to deal with this politically," he said.

"So then we're a puppet committee sitting here," Goedecke added, "There's not much we can do."

"We can't speak to the fact that people don't come to meetings," Board member Jill O'Donnell said. "I just don't feel that getting it down to $1,700 per week for a few weeks per year is really a very satisfactory record."

"I felt the same way about the police contract and the salary situations that we deal with all the way along," Goedecke said. "They're such a major part of the budget, over which we have no control and yet we are supposed to advise the Town on financial matters.

"It leaves this gaping whole area over which we have to react," she added, "and I think Dick's right; this form of government doesn't give us the opportunity."

In the end, the Advisory Board voted 3-1, with two abstaining, to recommend the passage of Article 25 because rejection of the article could result in legal problems for the Town because of its contract with the Fire Department.

Most likely, the board will attach a resolution to the article explaining its philosophical disagreement with the proposal.

In other action, the Advisory Board voted unanimously against recommending Article 15, a proposal to appropriate $20,000 to reanalyze the costs of various options for providing expanded sewer service to the town.

Examining the town's water supplies

By Scott Fitzsimmons
(This was one of the essays submitted in the Gilbert Tower Memorial Award. The essays, written by members of the high school A.P. History class, were reviewed by a panel of judges. The finalists are being published in the Mariner. Ed.)

At the present time, Cohasset has one of the best water supplies and water systems in the state. The main reservoir, Lily Pond, easily provides enough water for the town's 7900 residents. If Lily Pond should ever dry up or become contaminated, then the town water supply would switch to the newly created Aaron River Reservoir, which is approximately twice as large as Lily Pond. Lily Pond feeds off of Brass Kettle Brook and the union of Bound Brook and Aaron River.

Prior to 1978, Lily Pond was the town's only water supply. The water was purified at a small building on Brass Kettle Brook, commonly known as the "Pumping Station". However, as the town's population began to rise, the need for a larger, more advanced system became apparent. In 1978 and 1979, the Aaron River Dam and Reservoir, the Bound Brook control structure, and a brand new water treatment facility were built.

"The Aaron River Dam is an earthfill dam approximately nine hundred feet long and twenty-five feet high." "The Reservoir created by this dam holds about 323 million gallons of water and has a surface area of about 150 acres, 129 acres of which lie within Wampatuck State Park. A fish ladder was installed within the dam to encourage various types of fish to spawn within the waters of the reservoir. The water level is regulated by a weir gate located at the entrance of the fish ladder. The cost of this project was $900,000.

The Bound Brook control structure was built in 1979. The structure's main purpose is to control the water level of Lily Pond. The structure is designed to maintain the water level between 42 and 45 feet. A fish ladder was also built into the structure to encourage fish runs from the Atlantic Ocean into the Aaron River Reservoir. The total cost of this structure was $43,000.

The Cohasset Water Treatment Facility was built in 1978 to replace the "Pumping Station". The "Pumping Station" was then totally destroyed. "The Cohasset Water Treatment Facility is designed to treat an average flow of 1.2 million gallons (of water) per day and a peak flow of 3 million gallons (of water) per day. The main building consists of various tanks, filters, and pumps, as well as the offices of the Cohasset Water Department. In addition, two sludge and wastewater lagoons, with a combined capacity of over 550 thousand gallons, and an equipment and department vehicle garage are also located on the grounds. The chemicals, used to purify and fortify the water, are: chlorine, alum, lime, potassium permangate, polymer, and fluoride.

According to Mr. Ben Curley, head of the Cohasset Water Department, Cohasset's water is among "the best treated water in the state". But he says that the key word is "treated". All of Cohasset's water is treated as opposed to Scituate and Hingham, which takes over half of its water from wells. Therefore, water from these two towns tastes better than Cohasset's water.

Mr. Curley said the town has no immediate plans to further restructure the water system. However, if the need arises, then a small extension, added to the main facility, would enable the plant to treat an additional one million gallons of water each day. The new system is able to handle up to 12 thousand residents, far above the town's present population.

The next major issue concerning the town's water department will be the vote on a moritorium around Lily Pond. The major issue is whether an increased amount of building in the immediate area of Lily Pond would contaminate the drinking water supply. The vote will occur on April 5 at the town meeting. A moritorium already exists around the Aaron River Reservoir.

Cohasset has a new water treatment plant and an ample water supply. The town's population rate is remaining relatively level. Therefore, there appears to be no need for any restructuring of the water system in the immediate future.

Art Center offers summer specials

Specials this summer from the South Shore Art Center are a series of intensive workshops zeroing in on a specific art technique such as working with clay, Oriental brush, printmaking, painting the sand and sea and drawing.

The Center, 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset, offers these intensive specials usually a weeklong in duration to allow students to develop a specific art technique. The intensive workshops run during the months of July and August and advanced registration is required for these as well as all courses on the summer schedule.

Coming in July is an Oriental Brush Techniques workshop taught by Eleanor Avakian the week beginning July 14, 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. She will teach the basic brush techniques that can later be applied to various media. Traditional Sumi-e (ink paintings) will be demonstrated on rice paper.

At the end of July, Ann Murphy will work with students on how to paint the sand and the sea. Her class will meet three mornings July 28, 30 and Aug. 1 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. This special workshop is for those who have the basic drawing and painting skills and who would like to focus on painting the water. Oils, acrylic, watercolor or pastels may be used for this workshop.

Syma will come to the Center for a one week, July 7-11, Child's Clay and Sculpture workshop. Designed for ages six to twelve, students will work with clay, cardboard, wood, recycled materials and lots of imagination to create three-dimensional art work.

For further information on these workshops or courses on the summer schedule call the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548. Visitors to the South Shore Arts Festival "Celebrations!", June 27, 28 and 29 can meet instructors and register for courses. The festival takes place in and around the Cohasset Common.

A good summer

In summertime, things get a bit sleepy in Cohasset.

People here like it that way. There's plenty of time to attend yard sales, country fairs, art exhibits, or to take a brisk sail in the harbor.

But this summer things may be more lively here.

It looks fairly certain a movie will be made in our town. An announcement from Warner Brothers is imminent as final contracts are reviewed and signed.

So, for a couple of weeks at least, our summertime lull will be interrupted. We can't think of a better interruption.

It recalls another film made during a summer 12 years ago along the shores of Martha's Vineyard. It interferred with traffic along the tiny island's small roads, it bewildered year-round residents who longed for the ways things used to be.

But it was also a lot of fun. It was neat to run into "Jaws" star Roy Scheider in a local restaurant, or watch from the sidelines as director Steven Spielberg set up a shot.

And before you knew it, summer was ended, the film crews were gone, and Martha's Vineyard became once again an isolated island in the ocean.

Warner Brothers is not expected to stay so long in Cohasset. A couple of weeks and the flurry of activity willl be over.

Rather than linger on the possibility of increased traffic, sightseers and possible inconveniences, think about the positives.

This will be Cohasset's turn in the limelight. We can have fun watching the spectacle of Hollywood. Local merchants and restaurateurs can enjoy the profit from hungry tourists and film crews.

Allowing Warner Brothers to come into town during our traditional summer lull will be a positive experience.

Some have argued that "Witches of Eastwick" is a commercial piece of trash. Cohasset should play no part in furthering its success, they say.

But again we recall the Peter Benchley novel, "Jaws." That was no Pulitzer Prize winner either. Yet, through the magic of Spielberg and the inspiration of a beautiful summer setting, the movie became classic entertainment.

We hold no allusions that "Witches of Eastwick" will stand alongside Citizen Kane as a valued piece of American culture. But it's likely to be an entertaining movie.

Let's sit back and enjoy it.

An open letter to Cohasset's graduates

(This letter was written by a Cohasset mother who wished to remain anonomous. Ed)

Dear Graduate:

It was with great parental pride that we all watched as you and your classmates walked down the aisle to the tune of "Pomp and Circumstance". How beautiful you all looked and how proud we all felt. It seemed so short a time since we watched you take your first hesitant steps up that school bus as you toddled off to the Osgood School. We have watched you grow in so many ways over these past few years and last night at Class Night 1985 fond memories flooded back into all our minds of your days of going to school here in Cohasset. Very soon you will be off to different areas of endeavor and we will only have memories to flash back to and keep us in touch with you. Come down memory lane with me for a few moments and recall some of those days of yore we shared together. If I get some of my events out of place please bear with me and just share my dreams and thoughts if only to keep me happy.

The Osgood School seemed so imposing to you when first you stepped across the threshhold. All those smiling teachers waiting to greet you lessened the thumping in your tiny hearts. It was exciting to finally learn what recess was all about and to meet so many new people all at once. Here was a world filled with so many people all your size and only one adult to deal with. Soon you learned that adult carried a powerful amount of weight and you had to pay attention to that voice or you were exiled from recess—at that time a catastrophe in your mind. The years passed swiftly for you, filled with Halloween parties, Christmas gift making, vacation time, Snappy Sneaker Day, Music appreciation, and all the excitement of picking out new friends who would turn out to be life long buddies. Before you knew it, Move Up Day was here and the Deer Hill School beckoned before you. This was Big Stuff—no more baby world for you!

Deer Hill School awakened you to a more difficult life. This was no world filled with games and extra play time—this was the real world. There were more teachers it seemed and you were switching classes instead of staying in the same one all day. For the first time you came home with opinions on what was happening in your world and we all saw the child world slip away and the youth world come

Residents urged to support warrant article

To the Editor:

Let's hope the people of Cohasset who have suffered through a succession of unrealistic expectations and broken promises in pursuit of a solution to the sewerage problem realize that they have what may be their last best hope at the upcoming town meeting to get sound, straight, unbiased answers by supporting an article that calls for a thorough independent review of the whole matter.

Some 200 people signed a briefly-circulated petition for this article, thus showing that the Sewer Commission has lost credibility through repeated defeats and changes in its proposals, leaving mounting uncertainty as to its present promises.

Consider:

Virtually all of the so-called innovative and alternative features originally offered have not met health and environmental requirements.

The funding so optimistically promised by the Commission has proven never to have been available.

The areas promised for sewering, even those voted by a town meeting, have shrunk or shifted, time-tables lengthened.

Now the system recently proposed will still require a working septic tank and has never before been used in Massachusetts. This plan could add the cost of a new septic tank for many home-owners.

Finally, the whole plan hinges on the hope that an agreement satisfactory to Hull, Cohasset and the State can be worked out for limited use of the Hull plant. Considering the uncertainty of future needs in both towns, and the vagaries of politics in separate towns, it is not surprising that the State, as well as Cohasset residents, are uncomfortable with this latest promise.

Reports are now circulating that new promises are being made in the wake of the May 15 information meeting: time-tables advanced, some changes in the areas to be covered, and a further backtracking on the controversial two-inch pipe system. Those who believe they will benefit from these promised changes should remember the broken promises of the past.

In the meantime the Board of Health now requires official disclosure of septic system performance in the sale of any property in Cohasset. This puts a hurdle — almost a lien — on the sale of many homes. There are examples of costs up to nearly $20,000 to complete a sale. Residents of problem areas, such as the Hillside-Veterans and Brewster-Ledgewood, should think carefully about what this means in the value and saleability of their property.

Too bad we need another study, but it seems the only way to get a firm, fresh look, or an alternative if some of the present promises suffer the fate of their predecessors. It can be done at the town meeting.

Sewer study article needs town meeting turnout

Letters

To the Editor:

More than twice the required 100 signatures to place the following article on the warrant for the June 23 special town meeting were obtained easily, and many more could have been obtained. However, the article will not pass unless enough supporters turn out to vote, and to counter those who prefer to stumble blindly onward with the latest metamorphasis of the Ward Plan. The Ward Plan has degenerated into a connection to Hull and a 3 phase expansion of the sewered area but fails to accommodate all needed areas. The article reads:

"To see if the town will appropriate $20,000 to reanalyze the costs of various options for providing sewer service to the area defined at Town Meeting, June 1984, using funding levels consistent with advice from the applicable state agency, and adjusting previously estimated costs for escalation and to incorporate any other cost information now available. Options are to include, but be not limited to, Metcalf & Eddy, Phase I, and the Ward Plan with the same sewered area and purchasing a share of the Hull treatment plant. Technical features not approved by DEQE, such as 2" sewer lines, are to be excluded from consideration. Analysis to include estimated annual operating costs of each option, and average total annual cost to each property owner in each class (unsewered, newly sewered, or already sewered). Assessment to include appropriate estimates for rock excavation."

Why do we need to stop and re-evaluate? For one reason, the Hull connection may not be approved, or may fall through because of disagreement on price and share of operating costs. Cohasset needs to know what the alternatives are. For another reason, the Hull connection can provide capacity to sewer only a part of the town that needs it — and only a part of the area voted at the June '84 town meeting. Eventually, something more will have to be done — perhaps building another small treatment plant of our own. But we already will have used our one chance at state funding by wasting it on the Ward Plan.

Haven't we spent enough on studies? Well, we have spent plenty on lawyer's fees that got us nowhere. We spent plenty for the excellent M&E plan, and on preceding studies, and then threw it all away to pursue "innovative alternatives" because they sounded cheap, "would be consistent with our unspoiled character," and similar ideological and emotional judgments. Unfortunately, we need to spend a little now to stop and take stock, before plunging ahead with a "solution" which clearly has become inadequate.

Doesn't the Ward Plan "serve the entire town" whereas other plans did not? No. It's true that one of the big selling points of the Ward Plan was that it included a program of on-site repairs for those homes not served by sewer, and funded by the state and/or federal government. But if such a program could be funded, it could be applied to any sewer plan. However, the state has advised that it will not provide funds for on-site repairs.

Aren't we threatened by court action if we don't proceed with the Ward Plan? Yes and no. The state, while generally supportive of the Hull connection because it would eliminate our discharge violations from the existing plant, is not entirely satisfied with some details of the Ward Plan nor that the Hull connection will be consummated. The state will not take us to court while we pause to analyze our direction, provided that we vote at the subsequent town meeting to proceed wtih one or the other of the means to resolve our pollution problem.

Won't we lose our funding by delay? No, provided that we vote to proceed on a specific plan at the subsequent town meeting. On the other hand, if we proceed on the present course, we will use up our one shot at the funding, on a plan that isn't necessarily the best in the long run.

Didn't the Sewer Commission presentation on May 15 provide some comparisons? The costs of the Ward Plan was compared with the alleged cost of a previous plan which included 3A business district and Ledgewood/Beechwood, and which uses conventional sewer line systems instead of smaller than normal connections as on the Ward Plan. The comparison did not properly reveal the differences in scope, value and cost of the various schemes.

Why Smaller than Normal House Connections? Are they common? They have not been used in Massachusetts, and have yet to be approved by DEQE, and may not be. The idea is to save money on the pipe to the street, and to retain existing septic tanks so that water (no solids) flows through a 2" or 4" line to the sewage system. Of course, the tanks will have to be pumped every two years or so to ensure that solids don't build up and clog the pipe. Because a major part of the cost is the excavation of the trench, it is questionable whether the saving on pipe justifies the operational headaches.

Can the Ward Plan (Hull Connection) be expanded to serve the area voted at the June '84 town meeting? No, Hull will accept only 300,000 gallons per day. The area voted at town meeting June '84, and which probably is the minimum area that will need sewers, would require 500,000 gallons.

Can the present plant be expanded, if the Hull Connection does not work out? Not likely. It is situated in wetlands which we would not be allowed to encroach on.

Is $20,000 enough for a reassessment? There is a mine of useful data in the M&E report, and in previous studies, as well as what Ward has cobbled together. A competent analyst should have no great difficulty updating the numbers for inflation and current funding, and in preparing a succinct summary of the cost, scope and advantages of each scheme.

Who should do it? Any of the established firms that specialize in waste water treatment. Ward and M&E probably would be unacceptable to many people for fear of bias, although M&E would have the background data and specific experience with Cohasset to provide the most comprehensive answer for the money.

How should it be done? Under the direction of the Board of Selectmen, who can set up a special advisory committee to ensure objectivity and to preclude the undeliverable promises and misinformation that has characterized the performance of the current sewer commission.

Remembering their school years. . . .

into focus. You knew Mrs. Mulhurn's cart meant I.M.S., Mrs. Montori was down on sweets, Mrs. Murphy wanted her books back on time and silence in the Library. Outside of school there were more things to do—Mr. Worley was opening up a new world to all of you. There was baseball, street hockey, basketball, soccer and those great Friday afternoon trips to Blue Hills for skiing. Cub Scouts, Girls Scouts, Junior Gardner's, and oh so much more. In summer there was the pool and the swimming teams, the Recreation Dept. program, the Sailing Club, Mrs. Pope's awards for all those avid Summer Readers. And just when you became King of the Hill and thought the world was your's, it was Move Up Day again and the thumping of the heart started all over again. You knew that in September the happy world was left behind and off you went into the BIG Happenings.

Cohasset Junior High was huge! How would you ever get it all down to an easy gait and make it on time to all those new classes? First they confused you with Day 1 and Day 2 and so on down the line. Next they told you if it was Odd or Even. After that it was classes in the West Wing or Classes in the East Wing. Were they all crazy? How did they ever expect you to get this straightened out? There was French, Latin, Spanish, Social Studies, Earth Science, Math, Algebra, English, and heaven only knows what else. Who in their right mind ever thought that Junior High was fun?

Ah, but here is where We started loosing you piece by piece. For the first time you were taught class distinction. How hard it was for you when you learned that you couldn't play with the next door neighbor any more. After all he/she was still at the Deer Hill and you couldn't associate with "Babies" any more. You knew that if your classmates ever found out you associated with Babies they would tease you and at your sensitive age that was too much for you. A hard lesson to learn about growing up.

Junior High quickly passed into Senior High. Remember the Medieval Banquet? The Dances? The Preppy Look? Summers at Bassings? Your first job at Cohasset Market, Bergson's, The Red Lion, Target, Stop And Shop, Log and Line, Cohasset Pharmacy, and any place else that would hire unexperienced youth. Remember the driving lessons, the driver's test, the PICTURE LICENSE!, the first drive in my car on your own. Yes, your youth was flying by and Adulthood was fast approaching.

First there was the BIG REPORT due in Spring of Sophmore year, then it was the world of PSAT's, SAT's, College Night with the Guidance Dept., College Night for all the Schools seeking to have you as one of their students, SAT Courses with Mr. Di and Mr. Eammons, SAT's again, Achievements, and for some of you SAT's again. Next came the College applications, and more College applications, the worrying, the nail biting and finally the acceptance! Your time at Cohasset was fast approaching when it would all come to a close. Here it was class night and in two more days it would all be over.

I've tried to touch on only the good times but know that there were some very hard times for you too. Your class seemed destined for so much sorrow. You lost a classmate and friend in Mark, you lost a beloved teacher in Mr. Davis, you watched another classmate suffer through a tragedy that cost her two friends, and yet still another who lost her parent in what was supposed to be her happiest year. Through all of this you all held your heads high and went on with your lives, a little sadder and a little older.

Tonight many fond memories come to mind and we shall all treasure them as the years go on. But now it is time to go on and store up a whole new world of dreams. For you my child, I only wish happiness and joy and may you always know peace as you walk between the raindrops. Thank you for being you.

Love, Mom

CHS students recognized for their artistic talents

By Tanna Kasperowicz
Special to the Mariner

The First Annual Arts Recognition Night, sponsored by the Cohasset Arts Boosters, drew a crowd of over 300 CHS students and parents to the First Parish Meeting House Tuesday, June 3.

The largeness of the audience was even more interesting, when one considers the Celtics and the Rockets were playing their third playoff game for the championship NBA title. The arts crowd which stood, sat and stayed (a lucky 100 sat) obviously felt these arts titles were just as important.

Cohasset Arts Boosters Co-Chairman Karin Bartow made the welcoming address, followed by remarks from School Supt. Eugene Crowell and CHS Principal Richard Streeter. Crowell, who gave a technical presentation on the arts side of the brain, was heralded frequently by art teachers and others for having done much for the arts. Streeter, whose wit has long been appreciated at Class Night, was in rare form...too bad Bartow had the speaker turned the wrong way for the first hour.

School Committee Chairman Dr. Joseph Nedrow turned to his neighbor on Fairoaks Lane, arts boosters co-chairman Sue McNamara, and smilingly said she and Bartow had continually "nagged" him about the arts programs throughout the year. Later, Mrs. McNamara said she considered his remarks to be a compliment.

The CHS Arts Teacher Team comprised of Jo-Ellen Wood (English Teacher), Colleen Lucas (Art Teacher), Ron Emmons(Drama Coach), Steve Shirosky (Instrumental Music Director) and Bryan Marks (Choral Director, who delivered his second son, Christopher Allen, shortly before arriving for the ceremonies) all made humorous/serious/tearful presentations. Many of the outgoing seniors and underclassmen appeared to be touched by the many words of praise, all deserved.

The following students were honored: Glen Hochkeppel: Music Honor Plaque, given for excellence in both vocal and instrumental work, State All Star Drama Festival Cast, Outstanding Soloist, Show Choir Achievement Award.

John Perreira: Special Plaque for Outstanding Choral Work, National School Choral Award (given only three times in the history of CHS), Barbershopper of the Year and of the 1980s, Drama.

John Kuntz: Outstanding Achievement in the Arts trophy, awarded by all five arts teachers; Art Representative, State All Star Drama Festival Cast.

John Kornet: Show Choir Achievement Award, Overall Outstanding Band Member, Most Improved Singer (barbershop and quartet), Senior Chorus Award.

Heather Davenport: Distinguished Performance (instrumental music), Show Choir Achievement Award, Show Choir Choreography Award, Senior Chorus Award.

Jaqui Fahey: Show Choir Achievement Award, Senior Chorus Award, Backstage Drama.

Andrew Glasfeld: Electronic Music, Drama, State All Star Drama Festival Cast.

The Larry Fone Jr. Memorial Graphic Arts Awards

George Adams, a neighbor and friend of the late Larry Fone Jr., introduced the Larry Fone Jr. awards, given to three students who have done outstanding illustration and design work. Mrs. Collen Lucas presented the awards to Brian Ormiston, Dudley Bryan and Liz Adell.

Arts Boosters Study Award

Kristen Pounder was presented this award by Cohasset Arts Booster Co-Chairman Sue McNamara.

Spotlight Awards

Marybeth McNamara, Liza Gallagher, and Sara Hamilton.

Art Representative Awards

These awards were presented by Arts Teacher Colleen Lucas to the students who represented the school in outside art shows during the 1985-86 academic year: Laura Doherty, Jen Hynes, Leah Burbank, Dudley Bryan, Kathy Conti, Kristin Eisenstadt, Gail Fasicano, Sally Hurtig, Peter Kasperowicz, Steven Migliaccio, Brian Ormiston, Kirsten Pounder, Allie Redfield, Sophie Redfield, Amy Stafford, Megan Terry and Liz Adell. Art pins were given to photographers Redfield, Stafford and Hurtig. Seniors honored were: Billy McKena, Scott Patrolia, Kathy Maguire and Wayne Lyle.

Whispers & Shadows Certificates

Additionally, editors and publishers of the CHS "underground newspaper" HEP, David Thomas and Leonard White, were praised by Mrs. Jo-Ellen Wood, English teacher, for their humor and wit. Mostly, it is thought she wished them to know that she knew.

Drama Honors

Drama Coach Ron Emmons honored the following performers and backstage people: Laura Kuhn, Jen Hynes; Technicians Jamie Cameron (Jamie was under the table during Candid) Dan Rossi, David Richards, John Perreira and Philip Mahoney. Drama Festival All Star Cast awards: Jenna Emmons, Erin Browne, Karin Anglin.

Senior Band Awards

Presented by Steve Shirosky, Instrumental Music Director, these awards were as follows: Celia Mullen, Director's Award; John Scott, Sara Bishop and Amy Hobbs, Outstanding Achievement; Dan Bliss, Melissa Nothnagle and Mike Brown, Outstanding Members; Jen Martin and Nancy Riley, Most Improved; Felicia Bartow, Leadership.

Jr. High Band Awards

Ann Dochray and Robin Haynes, Most Improved; Sophie Redfield, Outstanding Member; Kristin Martin, Director's Award.

Barbershop Chorus & Quartet Awards

Vocal Music Instructor Bryan Marks made these presentations: Johnathan DeLima, Outstanding Newcomer; Peter Kasperowicz and Matt Silvia, Dedication.

Show Choir Achievement Awards

Rebecca McCarthy and Amanda Sweeney, Choreography.

Jr. High Chorus Awards

Julie Caristi, Kerry Ripley, Brooke Anderson and Tracy Christina, Section Leaders.

Golden Fish Award

Senior Heather Davenport presented Instrumental Music Director Steve Shirosky with the envied "Golden Fish" award, claiming that seniors had "molded" him and made him the teacher he is today. "We did it, we take the credit," Davenport said, adding that two other arts teachers had been considered, but rejected for the award. "You are it, our Mr. Golden Fish."

Maritime Museum to open

The Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum, located with its companion building the Capt. John Wilson Historical House at Cohasset Village, will be open for the society's busy summer season, Saturday, June 28.

The Maritime Museum is an 18th century ship chandlery, or marine supply store, built by Cohasset entrepreneur Samuel Bates for his fishing fleet at Cohasset Harbor. Originally located on Border Street at the Harbor, the Maritime Museum was given to the Historical Society in the 1950's and moved from its site to the Society's property on Elm Street at Cohasset Center. Today it houses a unique collection of maritime artifacts, pictures, documents and relics representing Cohasset's long seafaring tradition as a fishing and mercantile town and home of numerous "Deep Sea Captains" whose vessels visited ports in many parts of the world during New England's great "Age of Sail".

Among its many collections of maritime-related artifacts is a growing collection of ship models ranging from an early fishing schooner called a "pinky" to the most recent addition, an unusual "builder's half-model" of the Nantasket to Boston side-wheel steamer "Mary Chilton".

The largest ship model found at the Maritime Museum is a full-rigged sailing vessel of 1866, the merchant vessel "Tecumseh", whose Master was Captain James Collier of Highland Avenue, Cohasset. "Tecumseh's" museum replica is nearly five feet in length, and was built aboard the ship on its maiden voyage by the ship's First Mate, Cohasseter Samuel Bates.

Also to be seen at the Maritime Museum are relics and pictures of some of the many shipwrecks which occurred locally during the two centuries of sail. Examples of the 19th century art of ship carvers Lot Nichols Stoddard and William Beal can be viewed, including the figurehead of the last fishing schooner built at a Cohasset shipyard, the "Henrietta Frances", and the schooner's transom carving.

Featured in the Museum's Minot's Lighthouse exhibit are models of the first and second Minot's Ledge Lighthouses, and relics saved when the first light fell into the sea during the "Lighthouse Gale" of April 1851. Equipment and gear from the 19th century mackerel schooner fleets of Cohasset can be seen throughout the Maritime Museum, and form a prominent part of the exhibits devoted to local seafaring.

Part of the Maritime Museum's first floor is occupied by the "Counting Room" of the Bates fishing business, and the old, high, counting room desk is displayed. Recent additions to the Society's maritime exhibits have extended the marine section of the museum to the second floor, where a late 19th century "fisherman's store" can be found, featuring many of the items carried in the store of the Tower Brothers, another family-owned fishing and mercantile business once located at the town's harbor.

Also located on the old chandlery's second floor is an extensive display of general historical artifacts and pictures from early Cohasset. Stone tools of the early Indian tribes living at Conahasset are extensively represented, as are tools of the town's housewrights and blacksmiths. Old school desks, a homemade piano and violin, part of the town's early Post Office, a helmet and caps from the early years of the Cohasset Fire Department, and a speaking trumpet from the Independence Fire Company are on display, along with a set of Currier & Ives prints showing 19th century Firemen in action.

These and many other relics of old Cohasset form the unique exhibit found at the Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum.

The Society's museums will be open this summer through September, each afternoon except Mondays, from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m., beginning in late June. Donation will be 75 cents for adults, 25 cents for children from six to 12 years.

Junior High field day

The Physical Education Department again sponsored the annual junior high field day held last week, June 4, at Milliken Field.

The parade to Milliken started in front of the school at 11:45 a.m. Each homeroom made a parade banner and dressed in jams and team colors. Competition was between homerooms to determine a seventh grade homeroom champ and an eighth grade homeroom champ.

Events included: 50 yard dash, 100 yard dash, 440, 440 relay, 3-legged race, sack race, piggy back run, human croquet relay, balloon squash, swim fin run, water balloon toss, and a watermelon eating contest. A tug-of-war, which is usually included in the field day, will be held on the last day of school.

After all points were tallied, Mr. Marks' homeroom won the seventh grade plaque and Mrs. Schleiff's homeroom won the eighth grade plaque. Plaques were donated by the PSO.

Student leaders acted as finish judges and scorer. They were: Steven Carroll, Leslie McGee, Mike Smith, and Terri Stover. Carolan Hurley was the photographer.

Physical fitness awards were presented at the close of the field day. All students had been previously tested in physical education classes. Certificates signed by President Reagan and a Presidential Fitness award patch was presented to junior high students passing above the 85th percentile in all areas. Certificates of merit were awarded each student who passed all areas but one. The following students were awarded the Presidential Fitness Award:

Grade 7: Corey DeSantis, Kara Manion, and Anna Sandell. Alison Doherty and Kristin McQuarrie received merit certificates.

Grade 8: Kerri Anglin, Michelle Hartley, Alison Kornet, and Madeline MacDonald. Jill Hamilton and Michelle Rourke received merit certificates.

The physical education department wishes to thank the homeroom teachers for their involvement as team coaches, and the PSO for their support through providing team plaques and refreshments to each competitor.

The junior high girls compete in last week's field day competition.

Golden Apple for The Teacher

For the second year in a row, the "Golden Apple Award" went to CHS English teacher F. Allan MacDonald.

This award, voted by the entire senior class, is given to the teacher, coach or administrator who the students feel is their most inspirational and influential educator. MacDonald teaches English and is head of the Alternative School.

PSO representative Linda Starmer introduced the PSO-sponsored award and senior class President Sandra Best presented it. The seniors all rose and gave an standing ovation to the man who, in their words, "could really understand and relate to us."

Congratulations Mr. MacDonald! Well done!

The 'Stings' were stung in soccer action

By John Kinchla
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset "Stings" (boys under 10) Soccer Team, once defeated in regular season play, were eliminated from the Coastal League Play-off and First Division Tournament by the Plymouth Bears.

The Stings coached by Steve Endris, John Kinchla, Herb Crehan, Rick Kondrat, Jim Lowenhagen and John Rolandelli had been unbeaten and unscored upon against their first six opponents. They ended their regular season with a record of nine wins and one loss.

The Bears defeated Cohasset 5 to 1, in a game played in Kingston last Sunday. The Bears scored two goals on penalty shots and three goals on breakaways. The lone Cohasset goal was scored by Greg Lowenhagen.

Mariner sports

Outstanding two-way players for the Stings were Scott Therieault, Chris Rolandelli, Chris Kondrat, Jamie Kondrat, and Mike Riley. Riley was assigned to cover Plymouth's high scorer and he prevented that player from scoring in this game.

Cohasset Centers Brendan Kinchla and Greg Lowenhagen were able to dribble the ball within scoring range, but a superb Plymouth goalie stopped all their shots.

Charlie Endris, Chris Kondrat and Scott Therieault charged the goal from midfield, but Cohasset was unable to score on their long rushes.

The passing by both sides was fast and accurate throughout the game. The three Plymouth breakaway goals happened when the Cohasset defense was beaten at the mid-field stripe by three long lead passes into their end.

The halfbacks for Cohasset in this game were Wes DeSantis, Eric Henry, Nick Terry, Ryan Freeman, Chris Kondrat was center halfback (Sweeper). The fullbacks were, David Northnagle, Herb Crehan, Brian Riley, Ben Redfield and Jim Magner.

her friends and classmates.

"Today is the tomorrow we talked about yesterday," she began. "Then it seemed like a dream. We prepared by setting goals, making plans for the future.

"Graduation is only the start of our dreams," she cautioned. "We pat ourselves on the back as we reflect on our yesterdays and how to prepare for tomorrow. We must live fully and joyously—aware of all possibilities."

Her final wish to her classmates was "to thank you for giving me the best years of my life. To Mr. Streeter (principal) and Mr. Di (assistant principal) I wish the best of luck on their new futures."

Salutatorian Glen Hochkeppel had trouble finding the proper definitionof Class Salutatorian. Helookedit up in the dictionary to find such meanings as "second banana, with a picture of Ed McMahon alongside." He said he was speaking to his classmates as the "Miss Congeniality" of the Class of 1986.

Irreverent in his discusison, Hochkeppel delighted students and parents with his off-beat dissertation. While blowing bubbles from the podium, Hochkeppel denounced the class' reputation for being immature. "As Huckleberry Finn once said about the virtue of maturity, 'I can't stand it. I've been there before.' "

He told his classmates it was impossible to predict what they would be doing in 20 years. Alluding to life as a train ride, Hockkeppel warned his classmates not to mature, not to be wary of the person riding alongside and "to have a happy train ride."

Valedictorian Jacquelyn Fahey noted how the class had been bonded by the deaths of classmates Mark Delaney and teacher Charles Davis, along with several family members. "These people will always be alive in our memories," she said.

The class of 1986 is comprised of individuals, she noted, with unique talents to offer in academics, sports, drama, and social interests. Maturity is not gained solely from books. Who can ever forget one's personal viewpoints? High school, Fahey said, is growing, and learning independence. A small school system such as Cohasset's allows the communication and togetherness that other schools lack.

There was a definite feeling of unity in this class, she added, which was highlighted during the senior prom and the satirical antics of John Kuntz at Class Night. "We've all had similar experiences that have bonded us together, but we have maintained our individuality," she said.

Fahey urged the graduates to establish their own goals. "Graduation is the first step in our future," she noted. "The past will shape our future. There is a whole new world waiting for us. Is the world ready for us—the Class of 1986?"

Principal Richard Streeter addressed the graduates by urging them to "use all the resources and live life to the fullest. Each of the 121 members of this class is unique," he stated. "Speaking for the faculty, we have been fortunate to know them and to think we may have had some influence on their lives."

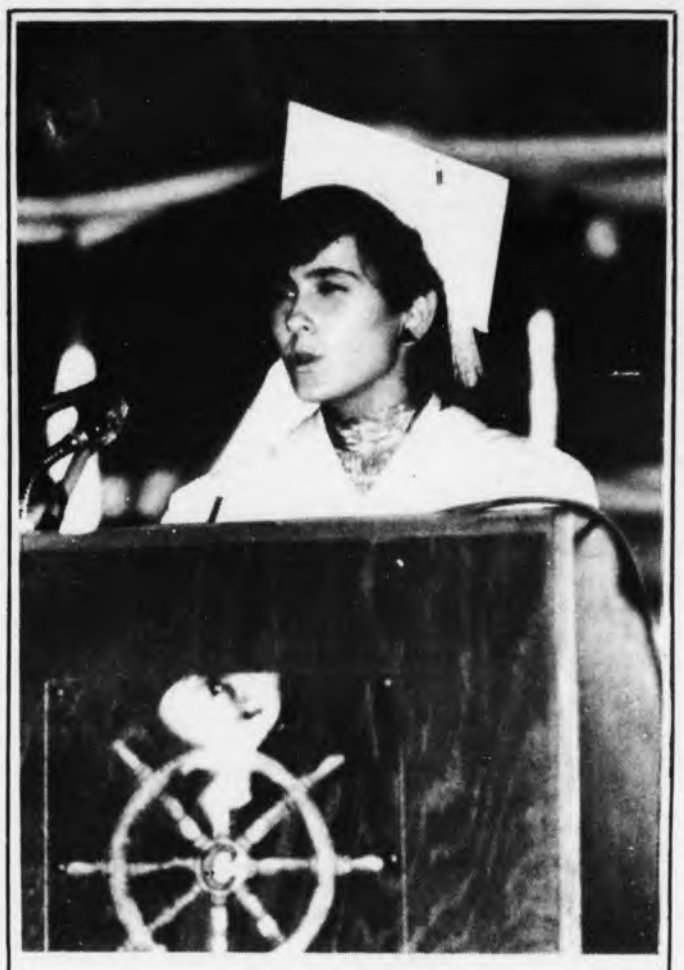
Supt. Eugene Crowell recalled the many achievements of this graduating class, which, he said, "participated with a vengeance." Eighty-six percent of the students will go onto a secondary education, with at least 80 percent of that total attending four-year colleges. Supt. Crowell said the figure will expand as soon as some of the graduates select their college. More than $75,000 in college scholarships was awarded this class, with more financial assistance expected from the colleges themselves.

Supt. Crowell recalled the state championship boys' basketball team, the championship football team, and the tournament play of several athletic squads this past year. Art, drama, music and literature have highlighted productions throughout the year, he added. The superintendent quoted a poem of William Wordsworth, citing a favorite line, "the child is the father of the man."

"Don't sell yourselves short," he warned the graduates. "Next year you face a new threshold. You must face it with steady achievement and make it continuous."

Diplomas were then handed to the graduates as their names were individually announced from the podium. Loud cheers and applause met each graduate as they were handed their certificate. School committee member Diana Kornet awarded her son, John Leonard Kornet III his diploma. Member Richard Conley gave his son, James, his diploma. Rev. Atkinson, who had delivered the invocation, handed his daughter, Sarah Kempton Atkinson, her diploma with a hug and kiss.

Resounding applause greeted graduate Tony Bogarty as he was given his diploma and a hug from retiring assistant principal Gino DiGirolamo.



Valedictorian
Jacquelyn Fahey

Once the ceremony was completed, the graduates sat still for a moment, and were instructed to place their tassle on the left side of their mortar boards. Cheers once again echoed through the Music Circus tent as graduation ceremonies for 1986 concluded.

A conversation with Mary Ellen Gallagher...

"It took me three years. I did a lot of the painting and wallpapering. I can take down walls, and help a bit with the carpentry. I had a good time with it," she recalls. When she put the house on the market (she sold the home herself), it sold within 45 minutes.

"The second person who saw the house named my price," she laughs. From Dorchester, Gallagher finally made the bold move to suburbia.

"I've really come to love the South Shore," she says. "I didn't know this area at all until I came to Hingham. Now I love it."

From the renovated ancient home in Dorchester, Gallagher moved to a newly-constructed contemporary in Weymouth. "What a difference," she comments. "Going from a three-decker to cathedral ceilings and decks. What a change! But it's a great house for entertaining, and I'm very social. I love to entertain."

Gallagher is single, and therefore devotes much of her time to school and students.

"I'm very fortunate," she explains. "I knew from the time I was a kid that I wanted to be a teacher. I thought, and still do, that teaching is the greatest job in the world.

"After a number of years as a teacher, I was attracted to the administrative side of the work. I like having direct input into school policies, using the same skills I have strengthened by working with my fellow colleagues."

The HHS assistant principal occasionally "picks up a class or two" for an absent instructor. "I taught English and history for many years," she says, "and if they need me to help out in Cohasset, I'll be very happy to."

Because she does not have family members awaiting her arrival after school, Gallagher said she is free to attend many school events and functions. "It's easier for me to attend to these events," she explains. "It's very important for the kids to see you, to know you care. I make it a point to go to as many games and plays and special events as possible."

Gallagher notes that HHS principal Richard MacLeod has always maintained a high interest in the student body, and traditionally attends all school activities. "We really have a highly-motivated administration and faculty here," she says, sitting within her Hingham High office.

The assistant principal was "very touched" by the standing ovation given her by the graduates and parents at the HHS commencement ceremonies. It was then that Supt. Lewis Ernst praised the outgoing administrator as a beloved member of the Hingham faculty.

"I am very happy here," she notes, "professionally and personally. I developed a great deal here. The words Mr. Ernst said that day were very important to me."

In her interviews for the Cohasset position, Gallagher emphasized her positive attitude toward Hingham and its school system. "I told them I was coming from a good place. The staff here is wonderful and the kids are terrific," she says.

Mary Ellen Gallagher

On the other hand, Gallagher says she did a lot of homework before applying for the Cohasset job. "I never sought to compare the two schools. I talked with the administrators here. I knew Cohasset had an outstanding school system. But I needed to know that I was ready, and what to expect. I talked with people here and they helped me objectively assess the situation. I believe I am ready for this position - I have to be ready!" she remarks.

"It's difficult to be objective of yourself," she adds. "But the Hingham administrators, staff and parents helped me in my decision. I sat down with those people who evaluate me in the system - we have a real team approach in administrative management - and they knew the quality of my work. I think before my discussions, I downplayed my strengths."

With an eye to the future, Gallagher said the Cohasset students can expect a "very visible" administrator.

"It's important to know the students' names, who's having difficulty and who is involved," she says. "I actively encourage all students to be involved in their school, for some students to take more difficult courses, for others to become involved in student government. I am a firm believer that those who participate in extra curricula activities and athletics, are better developed and happier students."

In her role as assistant principal, Gallagher says she has encountered teens "who absolutely hate school. I work closely with the guidance department, because it's so important they be an advocate of these kids. For kids in the seventh through the 12th grade, it's so important to know they have an advocate in the system. Cohasset is the same. They have many fine staff members who can pick up on such a problem. It's important to be aware of your students and to be involved."

A conversation with Cohasset's new principal...

An avid sailor, Gallagher says aside from her studies, athletics were her source of involvement throughout her education. She skiis, sails, and was a high school and college basketball player. She quickly, "I'm serious and carefree. I'm very serious about my work, and carefree about most other things," she explains.

Leaving her familiar office within Hingham High School will be emotionally difficult for Gallagher. "I have a tremendous feeling of regret," she says, "but that's balanced by feelings of excitement, thinking about Cohasset. I have feelings of loss. I was a drama coach and advisor to the school newspaper at various times in her career.

She loves to travel, and will be going to Italy this summer with a group of friends. "I took a night course in Italian, so I'll be able to converse a little bit," she says with enthusiastic anticipation.

The last two summers, she and her friends traveled to communist countries in Eastern Europe. "I wanted to see how they live there, what their experience is like. I came back home very happy to be living here," she recalls.

When asked to describe herself, Gallagher says formed some great relationships here. I have enjoyed the comradery with parents, staff and students. In six and a half years, I've dealt with a lot of families who had two or three kids here. It's hard to leave that. Hingham afforded me a tremendous opportunity to grow professionally and personally. But I look forward to Cohasset - to making a fresh start. That will be the challenge."

Happy Fathers' Day

More grant funds & company donations for voke-tech

Since the spring of 1985, $245,740 in funded grants have been received by South Shore Vocational Technical High School. The grants have been obtained through the efforts of Paul Babcock, Director of Development. Since he came to South Shore Vo-Tech, Babcock has brought in funds through both federal and state grants as well as from private industry.

Babcock, a Weymouth resident, continues to work on proposals for new sources of revenue for the eight-member regional school system.

Babcock noted, "I enjoy the writing, management and administration of the grants that have been received by South Shore. It has been a challenge, time consuming, but a challenge."

Dr. Clifford Easton, Supt. of South Shore, won school committee approval for the director of development position in early 1985.

Following extensive interviews, Babcock was selected for the challenging position.

Easton noted, "Paul Babcock's contribution to South Shore's programs and student body since then, has far surpassed my initial expectations. Not only did he manage to meet that goal by bringing in more grant money and industrial donations than have ever been previously received, but he has added dimensions to the position that I had not even dared to hope."

Three grants have been received and the projects are underway in the development of competency-based vocational education curriculum in the trade areas of auto body, heating ventilation and air conditioning and in graphic arts. The purpose of these grants which total $42,000 is to develop current curriculum in the three trades. The instructors working on the project had to first complete a Massachusetts Department of Education training program.

Through the federal government, a grant was received for $22,295 to provide psychological counseling to students, individually and in groups including home visits. This service is provided in addition to the budgeted services offered to the students at South Shore.

Three full-time teacher aides have been funded to assist students on individual educational plans through Babcock's work. One aide works with two special education instructors in the resource room and specializes in academic assistancce and support. Another aide supports special education students in the shop situation and the third aide works with special education students in the trade-related subjects of math, industrial theory and drawing/ blue print reading. An additional fourth aide, working part time, supervises and assists students doing school work while serving "in-house" suspensions.

A total $2,692 was received to cover a portion of the salary of one guidance counselor who services handicapped students and $2,955 was received through a Commonwealth Inservice Grant to provide additional training for instructors in working with students on individualized educational plans.

Babcock secured $24,069 to provide a cooperative linkage between the machine and drafting departments which provided four computer-aided drafting work stations and a computer numerical control milling center for the school. All of the equipment is utilized by the students in the day program to facilitate and upgrade technical shop training.

A Sex Equity Occupational Opportunity Grant for $39,570 has allowed South Shore to offer an afternoon program that provides training for males and females in trade areas that are considered to be non-traditional.

A total of $3,366 was received to fund a Community Awareness Specialist and $2,950 was received to provide a leadership training program for the school committee and administration at South Shore. A sum of $1,672 was received under the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act to purchase additional equipment.

Recent notification of approval of two additional grants will allow South Shore to operate a summer academic remediation program for incoming ninth graders and current freshman who need academic help to assist them in reaching their full potential.

Art Center Festival...

Join 'Celebration'

An evening of music, strolling on the lawn of an elegant old New England seacoast estate, dining with the stars or enjoying the splendor of a summer sea breeze - as the dawn light on "Celebration!", patrons of the 31st South Shore Arts Festival will enjoy a weekend of elegant activities.

The South Shore Art Center, at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset, opens its 31st annual summer arts festival celebrating the visual and performing arts Friday evening, June 27 with a champagne preview of juried exhibit winners on the lawn of the Oaks, formerly an elegant private residence and now the corporate headquarters for Yankee Gas and Oil.

Lionel Hampton and his Orchestra plus Woody Herman and his Young Thundering Herd will perform the music of the big band era at a benefit concert for the South Shore Art Center. This year marks a major fund development campaign "A Capital Idea" geared to the expansion of the Center's programs and the building of a new 8,000 square foot facility.

Three categories of tickets are available to the benefit events. Benefactor tickets of $125 per person includes admission to the champagne preview, the pre-concert dinner and the jazz concert. Patron tickets of $50 per person include admission to the champagne preview and the jazz concert and jazz concert tickets of $25 per person is for only the concert. Tickets must be purchased by June 14. A fourth category, the sponsor ticket for $10 per person is for the champagne preview only.

Woody Herman will greet guests prior to the pre-concert dinner. Shuttle service will run from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m. from the Music Circus on Sohier Street to the dinner. On Friday night, trolley transportation will take guests from the Cohasset Common to the champagne preview. Juried exhibit winners will receive their awards and the Pro Arte Singers will provide music for the preview.

The opportunity to hear them together on the same stage will give the audience a unique chance to listen to the great music of the big band era.

For further information on this benefit concert, call the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548. Tickets may be charged to Visa or Mastercard.

Watercolor exhibit

Ruth Cobb has been chosen as the artist for the South Shore Art Center's President's Choice Exhibit to be shown in the invitational gallery at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset during the month of July.

The opening of Cobb's exhibit coincides with the 31st annual South Shore Arts Festival "Celebration!" on the Cohasset Common, June 27, 28 and 29. Cobb's opening is from 6 to 8 p.m. Saturday, June 28.

In selecting her subject matter, she is concerned with the patterns of light as they are reflected on multiple surfaces. "And I use the transparency of watercolor as an integral part of the idea as I attempt to create luminescence in my work," she said.

A graduate of Massachusetts College of Art, Cobb has paintings in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts; the Butler Institute of American Art; Munson Williams Proctor Institute; Virginia Museum of Fine Arts, Richmond; Brandeis University, Addison Gallery of American Art, Andover; DeCordova Museum, Lincoln; University of Massachusetts at Amherst; and Tufts University.

She has been featured in "Watercolor Bold and Free" by Lawrence Goldsmith; "Prize-Winning Art - Book 7" by Allied Publications, "Artist at Work," a WCVB Television program, and in American Artist Magazine on the Watercolor page. Her one-person exhibits include the Brockton Museum, DeCordova Museum, McNay Museum in San Antonio, Francesca Anderson Gallery in Boston, Midtown Gallery in New York and several others.

She has been awarded the Adolph & Clara Obrig Prize by the National Academy of Design and has won various awards from the American Watercolor Society and the Boston Watercolor Society. She is listed in "Who's Who" and "Who's Who in American Art."

Showing concurrently in the members gallery will be an exhibit of watercolors from Virginia Avery's watercolor workshop to Tortola.

The public is invited to visit both exhibits through July 31 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., Monday through Friday. For further information contact the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548.

Big band concert

Lionel Hampton and his orchestra come to the South Shore June 29 for the first time to play under the tent of the South Shore Music Circus.

Hampton and his orchestra will appear with Woody Herman and his Young Thundering Herd in a benefit concert for the South Shore Art Center beginning at 8 p.m. on Sunday, June 29. This concert presents a unique opportunity to hear two great bands together for one night and playing the music they have played for decades — jazz and popular music.

A gala dinner at a beautiful Cohasset seaside estate will precede the concert and Woody Herman will come to the dinner to chat with guests. The benefit concert draws to a conclusion three days of festive activities on the Cohasset Common. The 31st annual South Shore Arts Festival "Celebration!" is the culmination of the dreams for a better arts facility and the celebration of a new beginning. This 31st year marks a major fund development campaign "A Capital Idea" geared to the expansion of the Center's programs and the building of its new 8,000 square foot facility around the corner from the present location at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset.

Three categories of tickets are available to the benefit events. Benefactor tickets of $125 per person includes admission to the pre-concert dinner, the jazz concert and the Friday night champagne preview of juried exhibit winners at "The Oaks", corporate offices of Yankee Cos., Inc. Patron tickets of $50 per person includes admission to the champagne preview and the jazz concert and jazz concert tickets of $25 per person is for the concert only. Tickets must be purchased by June 14. A fourth category, the sponsor ticket for $10 per person is for the champagne preview only.

Shuttle service will run from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m. from the Music Circus on Sohier Street to the dinner. On Friday night trolley transportation will take guests from the Cohasset Common to the champagne preview.

Come join in the festivities of the 31st South Shore Arts Festival as it dawns a new light on a new era for the South Shore Art Center. For ticket information contact the Center, 383-9548. Tickets may be charged to either Visa or Mastercard.

It was Class Night for Mr. Di and seniors

For the senior class, it was a mix of poignancy and hysteria, of tears and of laughter. The 1986 Class Night was a time to remember for all the graduates of Cohasset High School.

As assistant principal Mr. Di approached the auditorium podium, shouts and applause greeted the popular school official. Earlier last week, he announced his retirement from the school system. Last Friday, the students of Cohasset High held an appreciation day for their departing friend and counselor.

Students and parents rose together to honor Mr. Di with a standing ovation.

School committee member Richard Conley first presented the Malcolm and Helen Stevens Memorial Scholarship to CHS seniors, Kevin Dunn, John Froio, and Michelle Stone.

Conley, a longtime personal friend of the Stevens' recalled how "Malcolm attended all the basketball games. He had a love affair with the kids in this town that will never end." The scholarship was created to assist Cohasset seniors furthering their education in the medical field.

The second scholarship presented by committee member Conley was the Alice and Walter Shuebruk Memorial Scholarship. The award is given to those students "who show promise of making a contribution to society." The following students were Shuebruk recipients: Sarah Atkinson, Sandra Best, David Caffrey, Michael Grenier, John Kornet, and Brian Leary.

The third scholarship announced by Conley was "a difficult one," he said. Margaret Mary Hardy "Maggie" was a close personal friend, Conley said, who firmly believed in doing a job immediately and accomplishing it correctly. "She earned everything she had," Conley noted, "through hard work and dedication. But she took the time to smell the roses, and sail up and down the coast."

The 13 recipients of the Margaret Mary Hardy Memorial Scholarship were: James Conley, Robert Corkery, Kimberly Crawford, Lisa Cuff, Heather Davenport, Jacquelyn Fahey, John Kuntz, Robert Leonard, Thomas O'Brien, Margaret O'Connor, Beth Perry, Daniel Rossi, and Robert Shultz.

A memorial scholarship in honor of Mark Delaney, a member of the class of 1986 who died in an accident last year, was presented in an eloquent speech by his mother, Virginia Nourie.

"The thing you probably most remember about Mark," she told his classmates, "was his ability to regroup his thoughts and dreams which he tempered with reality."

She recalled how he tried out for the basketball team, but didn't make the final cut. Thinking he would be unconsolable by the time she got home from work, Mrs. Delaney was surprised to find him "fine."

She remembered that instead of remaining upset or dejected, Mark lingered on his many attributes. "He said to me, I know what I'm good at, I like to talk in front of people," he told her that day, adding in the future he would like to work in television or for a newspaper.

"Make sure your ideals and dreams blend with reality," she advised the graduates. "Reach for your dreams but face reality. Greg (Mark's young brother) and I wish the best to you."

The memorial scholarship was awarded to Robert Corkery and Sandra Best.

Once again, school committee member Conley made another presentation of a memorial scholarship. The John G. Carzis Memorial Scholarship was created in memory of the former owner of Hugo's Restaurant.

Conley recalled how Carzis, a Greek immigrant, built a successful business but never forgot those without. Once a year, the hungry and poor were invited to the nationally-known restaurant where Carzis would personally cook the free meal. "But his generosity exceeded just one day a year," Conley noted.

To the astonishment of the audience, the Carzis scholarships amounted to two, $5,000 awards. They were given to seniors Carolyn O'Brien and Glenn Hockkeppel.

A scholarship was created this year in memory of Charles Davis, a CHS math teacher who died last October. The scholarship was presented by his widow to Beth Perry.

Another special moment of the evening was during the presentation of the PSO's Golden Apple Award. Each year the parent-student organization grants the award to an outstanding teacher at Cohasset High School. Alan MacDonald received the award last week.

"I can't get over the kindness and generosity you have shown me. I wish you the best," the surprised educator said upon his acceptance.

After all the awards were presented, it was time for the seniors to vent their frustrations in a biting satirical monolgue to their teachers and peers.

Although the honor is sometimes reserved for the class president, Sandra Best handed the responsibility to John Kuntz.

An experienced orator and dramatist, Kuntz left few unbattered bodies as he hammered hit after hit against his teachers and administrators. As his classmates howled in shocked amusement, Kuntz criticized everything including the principal's attire, advising "never stare directly at Mr. Streeter's ties." He added, "it was just this year we found out who Mr. Streeter was. I always thought he was a well dressed custodian."

No subject was sacred as Kuntz attacked the cafeteria food "I always wondered why so many dogs hang outside the door."

He mimicked the malfunctioning public address system, the school's attendance policy, teachers' wardrobes, disposition, and hairstyles. Finally, Kuntz extended his appreciation, noting unless he felt comfortable with the faculty and staff of CHS he could never have successfully satirized them. Kuntz was given a standing ovation by his classmates.

Although principal Streeter traditionally followed at the podium for his retaliatory turn, the outgoing administrator declined. For years, he said, he has allowed the senior class to make Class Night "their last hurrah." Kuntz, through his humor and biting wit, accomplished what other classes failed.

He, too was given a standing ovation by the members of the 1986 graduating class.

The following seniors were awarded scholarships during Class Night ceremonies:

American Legion - George H. Mealy Post #118 — $700 Anne O'Leary, $700 Beth Perry, and $700 Michelle Stone; Bausch & Lomb Award — John Kornet (Senior), Lisa Shumaker (Junior); John G.

Informal refreshments will follow in the Parish House.
Job opportunities for volunteers — The Maintenance Committee has posted a list of small tasks to be accomplished around the Parish House. Please take a look on the bulletin board at the list and see if you can help out.

Cohasset country fair was a big hit at Town Hall...

Despite the inclement weather last Saturday, the Cohasset Country Fair sponsored by the Friends of Cohasset's Troop 28 BSA was very successful. It was held at the Town Hall.

Over 24 crafters and exhibitors attended. The variety of crafts included wood-making articles, copper jewelry, "cat" creations, quilts, pottery, Cabbage Patch clothes, hooked rugs, glass wares, gardening tools, kitchen items among many others.

A canine demonstration, sponsored by the Boston MDC Police and canine division, took place in front of the Town Hall. Coming from Wilmington, were officers William Power and Reid Rideout and his dog "King."

The officers spoke of the importance of the canines utilized in search and rescue for lost people as well as seeking out criminals in a building search or when a crime was committed, and in searching for narcotics and explosives. "King," when commanded, demonstrated his ability to "catch the criminal" very effectively.

A special thank you to all who help support Troop 28 at the Country Fair. The proceeds will go toward the Scouts Summer Camp or the New York-Canada trip planned in June.

The winners of Troop 28 prizes are:

1. Tray donated by Cohasset King Jewelers — Catherine Walsh of Needham;
2. Fruit Basket donated by Cohasset Central Market — Shirley Laidlow of Cohasset;
3. Conditioner & shampoo donated by Pat's Hair Styling — David Farrag of Cohasset;
4. $10 gift certificate by Strawberry Parfait — Mark Mueller of Cohasset;
5. Frozen dinner by Sea & Cheese — Claire Bonvie of Cohasset;
6. Box of chocolates by Sharon's Chocolate Factory — Peter Langelle of Cohasset;
7. Framed picture by Woolworths — Nancy Kucinski of Cohasset;

Coupons for small pizza from Papa Ginos — Linda Farrag, Cohasset; Lucia Bonanno (won 2), Cohasset; Mrs. F.L. Good, Cohasset; Marion Smith, Cohasset; J. Barbuto, Hingham; Don Fraser (won 2), Cohasset; Phyllis Haskell, Rockland; Karin Bartow, Cohasset; Pat Anstead, Cohasset; and Carolyn LaVarge, Cohasset.

Post 28 Explorer Raffle. Everyone had to guess total amount of jelly beans in a fish bowl and the closest one won:

1. Kim Costas of Scituate won first prize for four explorers to do four hours of yard work;
2. Norman Cedarstrom of Rockland won second price for three explorers to work two hours yard work; and
3. Rob Porcello of Norwell won the fish bowl and 1407 jelly beans.

Swim team tryouts

Tryouts for the Cohasset Swim team will take place Friday, June 20 from 2 to 4 p.m.

Formal practice begins Monday, June 23 at the town swimming pool. The schedule is as follows: 8 a.m. - eight years and under; 9 a.m., 10 years and under; 10 a.m., 12 years and under, 11 a.m., 14 years and 16 years and under.

Mme. Dirivachter celebrates 101st birthday

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

Not everybody can have their birthday announced on national television, but then again not everybody is 101 years old.

Mademoiselle Marguerite Dirivachter celebrated her 101st birthday recently with fellow Cohasset Knoll residents and students from local schools. Willard Scott of The Today Show television program saluted Mademoiselle on the air.

"I wrote Willard Scott a letter telling him it was Mademoiselle's birthday," said longtime friend Marjorie Giffen of Cohasset. "He called and asked how to pronounce her name. My husband didn't tell me about it until afterwards."

Students from the Jacobs Elementary School in Hull and nursery school students from Dolly's School in Hingham celebrated with Mademoiselle Dirivachter at Cohasset Knoll. The students made birthday cards and a large birthday banner for Mademoiselle.

"The children made Mademoiselle very happy," said Giffen. "They sang songs for her and had cake and punch with her."

Governor Dukakis sent his greetings, Giffen said. Also, the French counsel general's wife came to the party with flowers and French flags.

"Mademoiselle kissed the French flag when she got it," said Giffen. "In all the years she's been here I don't think she ever went back to France."

Mademoiselle Dirivachter was born in Mont Beliard, France, in 1885. The daughter of a charcutier, or sausagemaker, she came to the United States in 1915.

"I had to work," said Mademoiselle Dirivachter, who has lost her ability to hear but still sings well. "I worked very hard."

Mademoiselle was employed as a governess, taking care of children for many families in Boston.

"I took care of children for a long time," Mademoiselle said. "I worked for nice people. They treated me well."

Mademoiselle said she never took a job unless she could have the power to discipline the children. "I said to the parents that I must be the boss," she said. "If I punish the children it is because they have to be punished.

"Children have to know who is the boss," she said. "Otherwise they won't obey you."

Mademoiselle and two other women who had moved to Boston from France bought a house on Marlboro Street in 1929, Giffen said. They provided working women, mostly employed by the Christian Science Monitor, with a place to stay.

Giffen met Mademoiselle in 1943 while looking for a new job. "I had come to Boston and was looking for a job," she said, "and they took me in."

Mademoiselle continued to live in her house in Boston until she came to Cohasset Knoll in 1981, Giffen said. Mademoiselle took care of many children, and also picked up a side business.

"Mademoiselle learned carpentry and furniture fixing at a vocational school in Brookline," Giffen said. "She could also upholster furniture. She even did a chair for me."

Mademoiselle said that helping people has been important to her.

"I help everybody," she said. "I like to help people. And people like to help me, too," she said.

Mademoiselle Marguerite Dirivachter has a corsage pinned on by longtime friend Marjorie B. Giffen.

A Stone's Throw — by Paul Steven Stone

The Call of the Wild Lawn

He lies awake at night listening to the sound of his lawn growing.

You can almost hear it now, if you listen. Each blade of grass whispering "Mow me" as it reaches up into the darkness.

He tosses and turns, but he can't shake free from his thoughts. Like a lover he can never satisfy, the lawn exaggerates his inadequacies and makes him long for the days of his youth, when teachers taught that plants fed on sun, on rain, on the richness of the soil. Now he's old enough to know the truth. Grass grows on spite.

"Mow me," the grass calls.

And it grows. And it grows. And it grows.

Seventeen-year-old needs stable home

Allison is an independent and sulf-sufficient seventeen year old white female. She is also a quiet, sensitive and mature adolescent. Allison is an easygoing teenager with no interest in drugs or alcohol. Her relationships with peers are cautious and non-judgmental. Allison relates well with peers and adults alike. At times, Allison places the welfare of her friends ahead of her own best interests. When Allison becomes depressed or overwhelmed, she will act in an irresponsible manner. Allison's two pregnancies and subsequent abortions can be related to this pattern. She is in the process of learning how to ask for help before she gets into a jam.

Allison is a sincere, compassionate young women and a hard worker. When Allison gets angry, she will sulk and withdraw. Allison's goals are to complete her G.E.D. and to prepare for independent living. Allison is a loner who cherishes her privacy and enjoys her own space. She prefers to live in a small family unit.

Allison needs a mother and-or a father to set realistic limits and to provide consistency, stability and nurturance. In the past, Allison has done quite well in a foster home and several residential programs.

Allison will benefit from an attentive, caring individual or family who will boost her self-esteem. She is able to establish a solid, consistent relationship based upon honesty, mutual respect and trust. Allison can return the love and attention of a caring parent. If you have room in your home and your heart for an adolescent like Allison, please call Don Moskowitz of Dare Family Services at 628-3696.

Professional training and support together with medical coverage and a financial reimbursement of $42 per day are available.

FROM THE KITCHEN by JOAN PINKHAM

Celebrate Father's Day with these treats

Welcoming any excuse to browse through the old scrapbooks Eleanor Magoon gave me, I turned to them the other day to see how Father's Day was observed at the turn of the century.

Her grandmother's clippings pasted in a yellowing album were garnered from magazines and, sure enough, one article began like this: "Men are always pleased with simple gifts and are usually embarrassed when presented with expensive articles of any sort.

The value to them of a gift is, as it should be with all persons, in proportion to its simplicity and usefulness" and goes on to give instructions on how to make: "a pretty pinholder for a Harvard man;" a "pretty" watch-stand and an "acceptable" cigar case. A thermometer case was tricky to make of paste-board, sheet wadding, plush and cream-white satin ribbon with a thermometer 3 1/2" in length and printed on the ribbon was the verse: "A silver pulse in a crystal vase, tells the way the North wind blows and times the bloom of the rose."

So, speaking of things simple, here is a dessert you may wish to serve on June 15th, Father's Day.

LIME DREAM PARFAIT

3-ounce pkg. lime gelatin
1 c. boiling water
1 pt. lime sherbert
Dissolve gelatin in water. Stir in sherbert. Beat until frothy. Pour into parfait glasses. Chill until firm. Serves six.

Fancy blotters, a case for holding shoe buttons were made from ribbons, cardboard and satin, while a medicine case for Dad was handsewn of linen and lined with oiled silk with embroidered pockets to hold phials of his medicine. A silken mirror bolster actually had the words sewn "to tilt the mirrow back." Satin ribbons, China silk and a wine glass were needed to make "an artistic match receiver" —it would seem Dad had to supply his own matches. Life was so very different in those Victorian days when home-made gifts were unlike anything we give today. Even a pair of garters were suggested for Dad's shirt-sleeves. A "Page of Savory Puddings" by Mrs. Parker and Mrs. Compton remarked that "a properly-made pudding is easily digested" and included "receipts" for Transparent, Fig, Puff Potato, Gingerbread and Half-Pay Puddings. Here is how Dad liked his.

PUFF PUDDING

Put a pint of sweet milk in a saucepan and set over the fire to heat; add a teacup of butter; when melted sift in a cupful of flour and stir rapidly for five minutes. Take from fire. Cool. Add six well-beaten eggs to the mixture and beat with a wooden spoon for 10 minutes. Let stand in a warm place for 15 minutes. Mix in a teaspoonful of baking power; grease gem pans with fresh butter, drop a table spoonful of the mixture in each and bake in a very quick oven.

Beauty and health hints have been cut out and pasted in the scrapbook and a paragraph on "The Complexion" reads: "I know of nothing which may be applied externally to improve the complexion. Keep your digestive organs in good condition,cut off sugars and acids and live upon a simple diet and your skin will soon be smooth. If the tip of your nose is red do not use cereals. Take every day a teaspoonful of olive oil; do not use much salt or pepper, nor stimulants of any kind." But, it was May S. who wrote in with a remedy for falling hair composed of: Quinine, 30 grains; Glycerine, 1 oz.; whisky, 2 oz. Dad was told to: "Rub in at night for one week during each month—". What a waste of whisky! And today, thanks to Louise Brehany, we have yet another treat for Dad called simply:

EASY VEAL PARMIGIAN

1 pound frozen veal patties
1 egg, beaten
1 pkg. Mozzarella cheese slices
1 can Marinara Sauce
1/4 c. sherry
1 c. Italian seasoned bread crumbs
1/4 c. grated Parmesan cheese
Dip veal in egg, then in a mixture of bread crumbs and cheese. Brown lightly in 2T oil and 2T butter. Place veal in shallow baking dish. Top with Mozzarella. Add sherry to Marinara Sauce. Pour over veal and cheese. Bake 20 to 25 min. at 375 degrees. Serve with cooked thin spaghetti. Serves four.

Coat of Arms

Ancestors at the Battle of Hastings

By Frank Keady
Special to the Mariner

Before the Norman Conquest of England (1066) there were no surnames as we know them today, in fact few, if any records were kept on behalf of the population which involved them individually.

After the Normans settled in England, names became the vogue, gradually spreading through all the classes until even the outlaws were more commonly known by their Norman (French) names rather than English.

The stories of King Arthur and the Round Table offered many popular surnames to the nomenclature and from "Song of Roland," one of the best beloved masterpieces of medieval literature, surnames such as Olivier and Rawland became popular and passed into hereditary usage.

Rawland is one of the many varients of the baptismal named Roland with some of the other spellings including Rowland, Rollant and Rolland. The popular French equivalent is Rollent: in Germany it is found as Rodland and Hrodland meaning "fame-land."

In recorded history the name can be found in Domesday Book of 1086 which was proscribed by William the Conqueror as a record of census, land and property ownership in England.

In appears as "Rollanddus" which is a latinized version and along with other entries, confirms the fact that several people who bore the name participated in the Battle of Hastings and were in turn rewarded with land grants in England.

The name is fairly evenly distributed throughout England under the spelling of Rawland but in France it appears mainly as Rolland. The famous French author Romain Rolland won the Noble Prize in Literature.

If you would like a history of your family name and a facsimile of your COAT of ARMS, please send $3 plus a self-addressed envelope to Is This You, P. O. Box 806, Westwood, MA 02090.

Arrangements can be made for full color reproduction.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

How Republicans went into decline, Part I:

The tenor of the times

Good golly, could any political party's fortunes sink lower than those of the Massachusetts Republicans? Having failed to elect a statewide official since Larry Bird was 15 they have given us as gubernatorial candidates first John Lakian of fanciful resume, then Greg Hyatt of fanciful telephoning, and most lately Royal Switzler also of fanciful resume.

Thus, while the national Republican Party is threatening to become dominant in America for the first time since Franklin Roosevelt defeated Herbert Hoover in 1932, the Massachusetts Republicans are at their lowest point since the Republican Party burst onto the national scene in 1856. How did this happen? What went wrong? What is to be done? In this and following pieces I will try to answer those three questions.

The origins of a state party that has given us three gubernatorial buffoons in just two gubernatorial elections starts with the Depression. Among major groups only the Boston Irish were preponderantly Democratic before the Depression. Other working class groups such as Italians had traditionally been Republican. But with the Depression and the New Deal the masses became Democratic. Depression children learned no other way of voting, and as Samuel Lubell predicted in his brilliant 1948 work The Future of American Politics, they were to retain their loyalty to the party of F.D.R. throughout their lives. In both Masssachusetts and the nation the Republicans had been dominant from 1860 to 1928; the Democrats have been dominant since 1932.

The second factor in Republican decline was the local effect of the most brilliant political son of Massachusetts, John F. Kennedy. So inspirational was Kennedy's short presence that those who were young in his time identified with him and his party regardless of their background. If you graduated from high school in 1962, as I did, it didn't really matter whether you were Protestant, Catholic, Jewish, rich, poor, urban, suburban, or how your family had traditionally voted. Kennedy, his eloquence and his energy were a lodestar; and the Republicans seemed lost somewhere between the posturing Richard Nixon (Kennedy's opponent in 1960) and the hapless Vincent J. Celeste (his opponent when he was reelected to the Seante n 1958).

A great many Republicans liked Kennedy and he returned their affection, openly rooting for Leverett Saltonstall's victory over Foster Furcolo for the Senate in 1960, and appointing both former Gov. Christian Herter and former Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge to top positions in his administration. But the inevitable effect of Republican infatuation with Kennedy was a weakening of their partisan ardor, a weakening that has hurt the party and paved the way for its being taken over by aggressive conservatives. The Republican carcass of the eighties is more open and available to political newcomers than the Democratic Party of the efficient Dukakis machine. Some of these such as Ray Shamie have brought energy and ability; others are buffoons who couldn't make it today as Democrats, nor could they have made it as Republicans when Chris Herter and Lev Saltonstall ran things.

The death of Kennedy, the Viet Nam War, Watergate, and the national nervous breakdown that accompanied those tragic years radicalized the young and further weakened the Republicans in Massachusetts. This radicalization of a large part of a generation of middle class kids comprises a third factor in Republican decline. By the time young radicals had aged a tad and considered what it might take to effect real political influence as opposed to their cacophonous futility and fatuity between 1965 and 1970, the Democratic Party loomed as what one (now a state representative) described as a "convenient vehicle." Many who had been radicalized moved to the right enough to be welcomed into the Democratic Party and thereby move it to the left. Most did not do so so cynically as the fellow I quote; their ideological development was a natural process over time.

The point is that the great majority of radical students of twenty years ago have ended up liberal Democrats and serious ones. They have turned into lifelong activists, providing, for instance, much of the ardor and political competence in the Dukakis coalition. To the Republicans they represent a lost generation and a lost opportunity, an intelligentsia made liberal and Democratic by the tenor of the times.

The fourth factor in Republican decline is the emergence of one Michael S. Dukakis as the state's dominant Democrat. Dukakis' personality, his policies, and his politics will continue to be debated without resolve. Friends will tout him for President and foes will argue that he is the luckiest damn fool in tarnation. But there is one reason he rose from the legislature, one reason he came back from defeat, and one reason he has been the perfect man for the Party in the '60's, the '70's, the '80's, and probably the '90's: his reputation for integrity.

With the Furcolo administration (1957-1961), which presided over the Boston Common Garage scandal (the governor was not personally implicated), the Democratic Party was tainted with a well-dserved reputation for corruption. President Kennedy often remarked that what propelled him to the Presidency was the desire to get out of Massachusetts and disassociate himself from the Massachusetts Democratic Party.

With this history, a history the Ward Commission showed hadn't changed much as of the late 1970's, the Democrats have a chronic vulnerability on the corruption issue. But under Dukakis' leadership the Party machinery has been taken over by a crowd that may be faulted on political or ideological grounds, but, with the rarest of exceptions, cannot be touched on the corruption issue. Dukakis has thus been a perfect foil for any Republican attempt to exploit the corruption issue. Nearly singlehandedly he has taken away what might have been their ticket to victory throughout the '70's and '80's.

Mittell Convention column unrealistic & 'incomplete'

Letters

To the Editor:

Mr. Mittel does admit in his recent article ("Notes and Comment from the State Convention") that "I am no journalist," and proves that by his misleading account of the May 17 Democratic State Convention.

His account of the Convention was more a collection of cheap shots against Gov. Dukakis, Sen. Kerry, Middlesex County D.A. Harshbarger, and others than a realistic account or analysis of what happened at the Convention or what it meant.

His column was incomplete. Mr. Mittel obviously was not present during the masterful keynote speech by outgoing Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti, who exhorted Democrats to practice politics from the heart for the benefit of all, rather than a politics defined by political consultants and based solely on fiscal analysis.

He also missed the main message of the Convention — that the Massachusetts Democratic Party does practice politics from the heart and favors a government of compassion and concern, a government that has a definite role in society.

Th nomination of Gerald D'Amico by the Convention was the big story, and rightly so. It was not merely a "stinkbomb" in Evelyn Murphy's campaign for Lt. Governor — it was a genuine statement of support by Democratic activists for D'Amico, and a sign that Murphys' campaign may have peaked.

In the future, I hope that the Mariner will ask Mr. Mittel to attend the whole Convention before he deigns to write about it.

Sincerely,
John K. McNabb, Jr.

Cohasset Democratic Town Committee

MUSINGS — by John H. Cutler

☐ Put this sign over the entrance to town hall: "Punctuality is the etiquette of kings."

☐ Isn't anything ever on the agendum?

☐ I'll bet you don't know the singular of the word insignia. It's insigne.

☐ LaRochefoucauld speaking: "We confess to small faults only to convey the impression that we have no big ones."

☐ An anonymous saying: A wise man knows everything; a shrewd one, everybody.

☐ A Maine farmer explained why he built a wall 4 feet wide and only 3 feet tall. "So that when it blows over, it'll be higher than it was before."

☐ The man who stole the Mona Lisa from the Louvre in Paris convinced his jury that he had done it as an act of patriotism—to return it to Italy—and was sentenced to just over one year in prison.

☐ Is the literature that used to be called neurotic and erotic still tommyrotic?

☐ Past history. Candidate John Kennedy on Eisenhower's gobbledygook: "As I interpret the President, we're now at the end of the beginning of the upturn of the downturn."

☐ Overheard at a cocktail party: "No, my ancestors did not come over on the Mayflower. They came over a few years later when the immigration laws were more stringent."

☐ John Quincy Adams became President of the U.S. in 1824, getting almost 50,000 fewer votes than his chief rival, Andrew Jackson. He won in the electoral college.

☐ The surnames Delano and Noyes have the same French origin. So do the names Bump and Bumpus. (Bon pas, or good speed, get it?)

☐ If Lee Iacocca wants to run for the presidency, he could attract a lot of Democratic votes by being seen driving a Ford.

☐ Big fish stories? Biologists are exploring ways to produce 70-pound salmon by placing eggs in warm water. The higher temperature prevents fish from undergoing a key growth stage, making them sterile and overdeveloped.

☐ If a person is alone on a desert island, does he have a personality? No.

☐ More Americans were killed in our Civil War than in all our wars since, including the Korean War.

☐ Some wag said, "It is impossible to make anything foolproof, because fools are so ingenious."

☐ England is not the only nation that has a leisure class. We have a leisure class, too, but we call them bums.

☐ Two of our three first presidents died on the 4th of July; John Adams and Thomas Jefferson. Adams' last words were: "Thomas Jefferson still survives." You are a good historian if you can recall Jefferson's last words. They were: "Is this the 4th?" Tom said it in 1826.

Clarification

"The Doonesbury comic strip published April 16, included a reference to John Horton among those Reagan administration officials who have, according to the strip, 'left office amidst charges of unethical behavior or criminal wrongdoing.'

"The John Horton referred to in the Doonesbury strip resigned from his position with the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

"It has come to our attention that in 1984 another John Horton resigned his position as the CIA's National Intelligence Officer for Latin America. We are certainly unaware that the CIA John Horton has ever been charged with unethical behavior or criminal wrongdoing, and he has advised Universal Press Syndicate, which distributes Doonesbury, that his resignation from the CIA was due to professional differences with Director of Central Intelligence.

"The reference in the Doonesbury strip published April 16, was to the John Horton who resigned from the EPA, and not the John Horton who resigned from the CIA.

"Garry Trudeau, Universal Press Syndicate and this newspaper regret any confusion caused by the fact that there have been two Reagan administration officials named John Horton."

June marks the beginning of hurricane season

June is a beautiful month. Flowers bloom in nearby gardens while the country side has taken on the lush green of summer. It is a favorite month of many people. It is the month of marriages and romance.

Brides in dazzling white, with smiling grooms, can be seen having their pictures taken in picturesque parks and on town greens. They are starting a new life together in harmony with Mother Nature's new season. Summer will begin at 12:30 p.m. Saturday June 21 when the sun is directly over the Tropic of Cancer.

Most of the precipitation received this month comes in the form of showers and thunderstorms. Many of these storms can contain dangerous lightning, torrential rain, and possibly damaging winds and hail. Another feature of June is the official beginning of the hurricane season on the 1st. More about that later, but first let's reveiw May's climatological data.

MAY SUMMARY

May was slightly drier than normal and below average in temperature. The highlights of the month were the powerful winds from a large ocean storm, located south of Nova Scotia May 12, which was followed by widespread frost on May 14-15.

Also the hail that fell on the afternoon of May 28 was quite impressive. At my station it measured up to one-half inch in diameter. But I received calls from Scituate and Cohasset reporting hail as large as three-quarters inch.

Total precipitation, at my station in Marshfield, was 2.84 inches, only .39 inches below normal. I recorded a trace of snow on May 4 as a squall line moved through southeastern Massachusetts. The maximum 24-hour rainfall was 1.10 inches May 22. Rain, .01 inch or more, occurred on 14 days with a trace on three days. Total precipitation this year has been 18.78 inches, 1.16 inches above normal.

The mean temperature was 55.3 degrees, 2.6 degrees below normal. The average daily maximum reading was 66.3 degrees, while the average daily minimum was 44.3 degrees. The low temperature for the month was 28 degrees May 14, with a high reading of 92 degrees May 19.

There were seven clear days, seventeen partly cloudy days and seven cloudy days. The average wind speed was 13.4 mph, normal is 12.1 mph. The highest observed gust was 54 mph May 12.

SUMMER OUTLOOK

With fewer tourists going abroad this year because of the fear of terrorism, here is the National Weather Service's summer (June - August) outlook for the entire nation.

The best chance for a relatively cool summer appears to be in the Midwest and the best chance for a relatively hot one, in the far Southwest and Great Basin.

The probability of cooler weather than normal exceeds 55 percent from Minnesota southeastward through the Great Lakes States into the Ohio Valley.

The probability of hotter weather than normal exceeds 55 percent from California eastward through Arizona and Colorado, as well as in Wyoming and Montana. It exceeds 60 percent in southern California, Nevada, Utah and western Arizona and reaches 65 percent in the desert areas of California, Nevada and Arizona that surround the lower Colorado River.

Another narrow zone of extra warmth, probably 55 percent, extends along the Carolina coast.

Rain is expected to be deficient in two areas. California and the lee side of the Northern and Colorado Rockies, with probability 55 percent except for 60 percent in central California.

There is a 55 percent chance of more than median rainfall in the lower Ohio Valley and the Mississippi and Tennessee Valleys below St. Louis.

The Northeast was not mentioned in the outlook, so New England can expect an average summer.

HURRICANE SEASON

According to Professor William Gray of Colorado State University, the 1986 hurricane season may have fewer storms than usual because of shifts in wind patterns.

He added, however, that he had no way of predicting how many hurricanes may strike land.

Gray based his preliminary estimates on winds known as quasi-biennial oscillation winds and several other indicators, including the El Nino current in the Pacific, variations in air pressure at sea level and zonal winds over the lower Caribbean Basin.

Host families sought for exchange students

Host families are being sought for 25 high school students from Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Finland, Holland, Belgium, Austria, Switzerland, Germany, France, Italy, Brazil, Ecuador, Australia, Japan and Spain for the school year 1986-87 in a program sponsored by the American Intercultural Student Exchange (AISE).

The students 15 through 17 years old will arrive in the United States in August, attend a local high school, and return to their home country in June of 1987.

The students, all fluent in English, have been screened by their school representatives in their home countries and have spending money and medical insurance.

Host families may deduct $50 per month for income tax purposes.

AISE is also seeking American high school students ages 15 through 17, who would like to spend a high school year in Australia.

Families interested in this program should telephone toll free 1-800-SIBLING.

Hollywood casting its spell on Cohasset

The Village had all the right angles

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Let's say no more that Cohasset was the "second choice."

In the eyes and camera lense of Warner Brothers official Samuel Mercer, Cohasset was the only choice.

"Witches of Eastwick" will be filmed in several South Shore communities and in Boston. But the predominant community on the wide screen will be that of Cohasset, its downtown business area, it's historic common and meeting house, and its stately seaside homes.

"I was attracted right from the start to Cohasset," location manager Mercer said this week. "We were looking for a charming, New England, picturesque town, with an interesting architectural style. The town's shops and homes have the quintessential New England seaport look," he said.

The Village area, which will be used predominantly in the film, looks as if it were laid out by a movie expert, he noted. "The angles in the Village are really interesting. The V-intersection there looks well on film. The meeting house and the common are so well maintained. They photograph beautifully."

Mercer, who is one of the first contacts a community has with the movie producers, said he seeks the visual quality of a location. "What I saw in Cohasset," he said, "was a town with a population size similar to that of the book. The proximity of the town to Boston was important, too."

Cohasset will not be the only community used in the filming, he noted. The crews will be dispatched from Boston to the North and South Shore and various locations.

After Mercer zeroed in on Cohasset, the movie's art designer, production manager, and later the director and producer were summoned to the town.

"First of all," he said, "I looked all over town. I took lots of photographs and we looked them over. The art designer went through them and everything looked good to her. Finally, the producer and director had to approve them. The process just started with me, but there's a whole chain of command who has to agree with my suggestions."

Mercer has met several times with the downtown merchants to confirm what store interiors will be used and approximate a timetable.

'Hello, casting . . . er, selectmen's office'

To all the inspiring Al Pacino's and Meryl Streep's of the South Shore comes this warning: Do not call the selectmen's office for casting information.

Since town hall opened Monday morning, the selectmen's office has been flooded with anxious callers. "How do we get a part in the movie? When can we audition and where will they be held?" they ask weary office workers.

"We don't know," an exasperated executive secretary said Wednesday morning. "All we can say is there will be a general casting call in the near future. It will be advertised in the local newspapers. But we will know nothing about it."

Executive secretary Donald Andrew said since he came to the office Monday morning, the phone has been constantly ringing. "I guess you could say we have been getting twice as many phone calls," he said. "We get a lot of phone calls anyway, but this week has been worse than ever. Just when you start to do something, the phone rings. You stop to answer it, tell them you know nothing about the movie, and get back to work. Then the phone rings again. It's getting hard to get our work done."

"It will do you no good to call the selectmen's office for information regarding the movie," Andrew once again emphasized. "We don't have information to give out. We have no telephone numbers, no names to call. Just watch the newspapers for the casting information."

Merchants foresee bu$y summer economy

Witches can have an unsettling effect on some people.

Tony Bennett was so nervous, he called Kimball's By The Sea. "Are my rooms still reserved?" he asked manager Dan Leahy.

He was assured his summer bookings were in place. The Music Circus headliner was duly comforted, knowing the movie stars from Hollywood would not be edging him out of his favorite summer hideaway.

"Apparently," Leahy said Tuesday morning, "he had read the trade journals out on the West Coast. His booking agent had not confirmed his booking here this summer. He panicked and called us the first thing this morning. He's all set. No one's going to take his room here."

Leahy is just one of the local merchants who envision a bustling economy this summer for Cohasset.

"After all," he commented. "You have bystanders and curiosity-seekers who gas up their cars, eat ice cream, buy hats, and will grab a sandwich and a cold beer. Inevitably, this movie will have an impact on the economy of this community."

And it's all because a movie is coming to town. For two weeks, Cohasset will be transformed into a mini-Hollywood movie set with all the excitement, glamour, and media coverage that will trail it like a shadow.

Leahy, who manages and co-owns the local motel, was contacted by Warner Brothers about accommodating the movie crews. The 60-room inn is not completely booked for the summer, but accommodat-

'Big money' articles, more sewer stuff clog warrant

For a special summer town meeting, there's a warrant filled with articles that will affect just about everyone in town.

Several of the June 23 town meeting articles, including the proposed addition to the town hall, carry large price tags. Advisory committee members are worried that approval of too many big-money articles will force the town into a Prop. 2½ override.

The capital budget committee recommended that voters postpone article 12 which requests $900,000 to begin the renovations at town hall. That is the sum projected by members of the town hall study committee by the architectural firm of Donham and Sweeney.

Another controversial article will likely be the citizens' request to appropriate $20,000 to reanalyze the costs of the 1984 approved Ward plan. Spearheaded by Old Pasture Road resident R. Murray Campbell, the petitioners are requesting that the town reconsider Phase I of the Metcalf and Eddy plan, and the Ward plan with the same sewered area and purchasing a share of the Hull treatment plant.

In a discussion Monday night with selectmen, Catherine Stanton discussed the merits of article 15. She explained the petition, signed by more than 210 residents, would help solve the sewerage problem. "There is no cohesive route (now)," she told selectmen, enumerating several questions residents have regarding the planned tie-in to the Hull treatment plant. "Will 300,000 (Cohasset's limit) gallons be sufficient? Will the state accept the Ward plan? Some are against the Ward plan period (regarding) septic tie-ins. Others have protested that their areas have been left out," she said.

Selectman James Gallagher offered his support of the citizens' article. Selectman Cliff Mitman said the article was "premature" saying until the town knows whether there is an agreement with Hull, any similar action should be postponed. Selectman Mary Jane McArthur emphasized the town is experiencing severe money problems, and the $20,000 price tag may be too great for the town to handle.

R. Murray Campbell answered that the total was not too great considering there is still time to find an alternative.

Sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil explained the article would "turn the clock back two years" to the time when the town had no plan and was under a court decree to clean up the harbor waters. "We have examined all realistic alternatives," he argued.

Selectmen said they would not decide whether to support the article until a meeting planned for Wednesday night. At that time, they will better understand the town's financial status, McArthur said.

The sewer commissioners have sponsored article 17 which requests $20,000 for legal and engineering fees incurred in resolving the town's legal fight to obtain a sewer plan. The advisory committee does not support the requested figure which is the commission's estimate of how much will be needed in fiscal 1987.

Article 19 which requests approval of a modified Ward plan has received the recommendation of the advisory committee and the selectmen.

Article 18 which requests approval of a modified state-approved Ward plan has been withdrawn. Al-

Cohasset's week . . .

Movie contract okayed

Selectmen this week approved a contract with Warner Brothers which allow the movie company to film along the public streets and buildings of Cohasset.

Town Counsel Richard Henderson reviewed the contract and made a few revisions to the document. There will be some nighttime filming in the town, Henderson told selectmen. The contract also allows the company to remove any signs on public property but they will be required to replace them. The contract will take effect July 1 and terminate December 31.

The contract stipulates a town hall rental fee of $7.50 per day and $10 per day for the custodian.

Red Lion to be sold

Selectmen pledged their approval of a liquor license transfer from Red Lion Inn owner Erwin Cohen to prospective new owners Kurt Smalzell, Francis Coffey and Philip Smith. The new corporation is named the 1704 Inn Limited.

Cohen, who has owned the South Main Street landmark for more than 40 years, said he will semi-retire as the manager-consultant of the inn and restaurant. His health prompted the change in management, he noted.

According to attorney Joseph Hayes, the new owners have experience in the food and beverage business. Smith, who will be manager of the establishment, will also reside at the inn.

The license transfer will become effective once it is approved by the state Alcoholic Beverage Control Commission.

Sewer bill paid

Selectmen and the sewer commission approved payment of a $8,090 bill from Ward Engineering.

Selectmen James Gallagher and Rocco Laugelle disapproved payment of the bill which includes engineering and legal costs incurred during the negotiation of a revised Ward Plan with the state.

There was only $5,867 remaining in the proper account, according to selectman Mary Jane McArthur.

Commission chairman Charles DeSantis also explained the commissioners have incurred $209 in phone bills during the negotiation process. "That's too much calling, and too much traveling," Selectman Laugelle protested.

DeSantis also predicted $400 will be added to the outstanding bill because of additional work completed on the revised plan recently sent to the state. Selectmen said they would only approve the current bill, and would not include any possible future costs.

First Parish resolution

Selectmen forwarded a resolution to mark the restoration of the First Parish Meeting House.

The resolution, submitted to the church during Sunday's community service, stated since the building was constructed in 1770, "for decades thereafter our Town business was conducted within its walls. The Meeting House stands as a proud reminder of our history and tradition of coluntary citizen participation in government and the open democratic town meeting."

State housing warning

The state Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD) warned selectmen that applications to develop affordable family housing in Cohasset are due by October 1.

Several weeks ago, EOCD issued a stern demand that town officials carry out a pledge made last year to develop a strategy for the creation of affordable housing and to demonstrate a commitment to that strategy.

The state warned then that Cohasset's failure to comply with the executive order could result in the town's ineligibility for state discretionary funds, including money for the state-approved sewer connection to Hull.

At a May 13 meeting with town officials, the state outlined several housing options. "We do expect the town to move quickly to develop Chapter 705 Family Housing to fulfill your prior commitment," Executive order administrator Carol Ford stated.

The administrator noted the state is concerned with Cohasset's determination to carry out the approved housing strategies. "We look forward to working with you as you develop a plan for affordable housing," Ford stated.

Straits Pond and Little Harbor

Residents of Cohasset most particularly near Straits Pond and Little Harbor and within their respective watersheds are reminded to use low or non-phosphate laundry and dishwashing detergents to help fight the weed and algal nuisance.

A common sense approach to landscaping and lawn maintenance can help to curb nutrient loadings. For example, lawn or garden fertilizers should only be applied in prescribed dosages for the soil on which they are being used. Contact the Board of Health for guidance, if required. Leaves, grass clippings, pet droppings, and other waste or organic material should not be dumped along or into these bodies of water. No fill material is to be brought in to extend a private yard or beach.

Be certain septic systems are operating properly to insure no leachate escapes into Straits Pond or Little Harbor.

Committee appointments

Selectmen this week appointed several members to the new Fair Housing Committee. They include Patrick Plante and Daniel Cotton from the planning board, Leo Happeny from the housing authority, James Gallagher from selectmen, Rev. Clifford Cutler, and Barbara Froio.

Selectmen also appointed John Lennon to the cultural exchange committee.

Instructors needed

The Cohasset Community needs instructors for it's fall classes, both adult and children's.

What kinds of subjects can you teach? Times, days and length of courses are flexible and are mutually determined with the program committee.

Call Judy Volungis at 383-0088 or submit a course proposal to the Program coordinator, Cohasset Community Center, 3 North Main St., Cohasset, MA. 02025.

School board accepts CHS sports coaches hirings

By Matt Baron
Mariner Correspondent

The Cohasset school committee by virtue of a 4-1 vote, accepted coaching recommendations for the fall winter sports' seasons.

Vice Chairman Richard Conley voiced the sole dissent, as he questioned the recommendation of five-year basketball coach Ed Minelli.

Athletic Director Clark Chatterton and Superintendent Eugene Crowell recommended Minelli, who has coached Cohasset to two straight Div. III state titles.

Regarding Minelli, Conley said, "I just think certain things should be cleared up . . . (there are) certain questions that have to be answered."

During the meeting, committee member Chris Ford said that by singling Minelli out, the committee would "stigmatize" the coach.

Conley initially attempted, therefore, to limit the consideration of coaching recommendations to the fall sports. The committee though, chose to include the winter sports to ensure that Chatterton had sufficient time to organize the programs.

Conley maintained his position and said he could not "in good conscience go along with" the recommendation of Minelli.

Crowell said, "I respect the reasons for (Conley) asking (questions) but I stand on my recommendation."

Conley didn't go into specifics regarding Minelli, but said, "He has not, in my opinion, shown the best interest of our boys."

Crowell responded, "It's still a judgment call . . . I think it's in the best interest of the school system (to retain Minelli)."

The committee was in the process of accepting blocks of recommendations for department heads and coaches when Conley questioned Minelli's recommendation.

"This is usually pretty routine," the superintendent later said of the recommendations, "This was just one of those things."

Conley refused to comment further on Minelli.

Chatterton said the committee probably "didn't know what (Conley) was talking about," and therefore proceeded to accept the recommendation along with the rest of the recommendations.

Chatterton declined comment on the specifics of the Minelli situation. "I just don't think it's my position (to discuss it)," he said.

Chatterton said there are 13 coaching vacancies, including four head coaching positions.

They are: boys soccer, junior varsity and junior high; girls soccer, junior varsity; field hockey, junior varsity; boys basketball, junior high and junior varsity; girls basketball, junior varsity; skiing; softball, varsity and junior varsity; sailing; track (head coach and assistant coach).

Cohasset Center museums to open June 28

The Cohasset Historical Society's two unique museum buildings at Cohasset Center will open for the summer season Saturday, June 28. The Capt. John Wilson House and Maritime Museum will be open each afternoon except Mondays, from 1:30 to 4:30, through the end of September.

In the year 1810 the housewright David Nichols built a new dwelling on Ship Cove Lane for Cohasset Sea Captain John Wilson, and sold it to him for $475. Today, Ship Cove Lane is called Elm Street, and Capt. Wilson's home is the site of the Historical Society's collection of early household furnishings and other objects from the old homes of Cohasset.

At the time Capt. Wilson's house was constructed, much of the north side of Ship Cove Lane still was part of the town's undivided common land, and it, along with others, began its existence as an encroachment upon the public land. Several years later the town conveyed the encroached lands to the homeowners and ruled out further encroachments.

Capt. Wilson's descendants resided in the house until the 20th century. A few years after the original part of the dwelling was completed, an addition was made to the rear of the house at the second floor level, extending out above the high ledge which rises a few yards from the roadway.

The Capt. Wilson House can perhaps be best described as being the only truly primitive dwelling remaining in Cohasset. Aside from some changes made over the years it remains very much an early 19th century home. Admission to the Society's buildings is 75¢ per building for adults, 25¢ for children 6 to 12 years of age.

The latest construction timetable for the Ward plan

On the 15th of May the Sewer Commission conducted a Public Meeting to discuss the Ward Plan. As a result of this meeting and subsequent sessions with the Board of Selectmen, the Advisory Board, the Capital Budget Committee, the Sewer Commission on the 11th of June voted unanimously to expedite the sewer service expansion schedule, to increase the number of streets served in the first phase of sewer service construction and instructed our engineer to file this plan with the DWPC for its review.

The following highlights the changes in construction schedule and timetable:

Schedule—(2) phases at a (5) year interval instead of (3) phases at two (5) year intervals

Streets served by phase—increase streets sewered in first phase. Now, the entire Hillside (except for Bancroft Road), Buttonwood Lane, and Summer Street have been added to this phase.

On the 15th of May the Cohasset Waste Water Disposal Project was summarized. We'll summarize again here with the above changes included.

The project consists of three parts:

Hull Connection—Conversion of Cohasset's waste water treatment plant to a pumping station which will pump our waste-water through a force main to the underutilized Hull waste water treatment plant.

Sewer Service Area—Expansion of the present sewer service in (2) phases over a five-year interval.

On-Site Repairs—An ongoing program to repair failing on site systems in the unsewered areas.

Streets in the first phase: Clayspring Rd., Arrowwood Rd., Tupelo Rd., Bayberry Ln., Pond St. (from high school to Bailey Rd.), Bailey Rd., Ridgetop Rd., 100 Pond St., Cushing Rd., Smith Place, Ripley Rd., to Pratt Ct., Pleasant St., Spring St., Deer Hill School, James Ln., Howard Gleason Rd., Hull St.(from #61 to Hull line), Jerusalem Rd.(from Hull St. to Greek church), Buttonwood Ln., Summer St.(from Border St. to Black Horse Ln.), Norfolk Rd., Norfolk Ln., Short St., Ash St., Oak St., and Hill St.

Streets in second phase: Atlantic to #31, Old Pasture Rd., Resevoir Rd., Holly Ln., Woodland Dr., Virginia Ln., Lantern Ln., Bancroft Rd., Adjacent homes on Pond St., Border St. to #119 and the Town Wharf, Parker Ave.(including Cohasset Colonials).

In order to increase the number of streets served in the first phase of sewering and to control the amount of town debt to stay within the confines of proposition 2 1/2, more of the projects cost were placed upon the homeowner than appeared in the May 15th construction schedule. The total project cost remain the same, but a higher proportion of the cost is placed upon the homeowner rather than on the general tax. A brief summary of the cost involved:

	Phase 1	Phase 2	Total for Both Phases
Initial Connections	300	135	435
Total local cost	1,546,000	688,000	2,234,000
Total project cost	4,237,000	1,028,000	5,265,000
Typical total construct. cost for homeowner w/new sewer	2,950	4,150
On lot connection cost	1,805	1,825
O&M first year	175	155
Septic pump out/yr	30	30
Initial bond payment	149	302
Total 1st yr user fee/ for home valued at $125,000	17	15

For areas outside sewer service, we have provided a town funded on site rehabilitation program. This program would provide $90,000 to be shared by 29 homes in the first year. This would impact the typical home valued at $125,000 with a tax of $33. This program would be conducted yearly. Each year the number of homes served would be lowered with a corresponding reduction of the tax impact.

For those who like to compare this program with the former M&E project, the following starting comparison is provided:

	Ward (total project)	M&E (Phase I)
Total cost	5,264,502	16,127,002
#Dwelling units initially serv.	519	555
Cost/new dwelling unit	10,144	29,059

For a town fast running out of all cash reserves, it is total fiscal suicide for our community to even consider a plan which serves nearly the same number of dwelling units but at more than 3 times the cost of the Ward plan.

Our plan achieves an affordable answer to our waste water disposal problems, while providing maximum protection to our delicate and precious environment. It provides for sewer service in our most densely populated areas. The only areas where this project can be remotely cost-effective in areas outside of sewer service our project provides for town assisted on site rehabilitation—in effect our "sewer avoidance program". This project ensures that Cohasset can master and direct its growth and that it will not become its slave. This plan ensures us that Cohasset will not become another sad indistinguishable example of urban clutter and asphalt. But rather that we will continue to be the loveliest town in east for ourselves and for future generations to enjoy.

It has been an exhausting, lengthly effort to reach agreement with Massachusetts on a sensible project. We are about to conclude our struggle with Massachusetts and move on to the design stage for our project. We thank everyone for their past support and faith in our efforts. We now solicit your continued support and ask that you attend town meeting on the 23rd and defeat article 15. A thinly veiled attempt at resurrecting the outrageous M&E plan and guaranteeing huge financial gain for a select few at the detriment of all.

Building 19's founder espouses philosophy on work

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Light-hearted humor was Wednesday's bill of fare at Hugo's Lighthouse Restaurant for the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, as Jerry Ellis, founder of Building 19, recounted his rags-to-riches rise in the realm of retail.

Ellis, who is also president of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, began by scouting his audience.

"How many retailers are there here?" he asked. "I'm just checking to see how much lying I can do and get away with."

The audience chuckled and several retailers raised their hands.

"It's nice to know that we have some people who really know what hard work is and have all the pleasures of the 80-hour work week and all the joys of waiting on the general public," he said.

"Any acountants in the room?" he queried.

One man raised his hand.

"Okay, I'll watch out for that," Ellis said. "Any lawyers?"

Another member waved.

"Oh, I was afraid of that; I see we've got a problem."

Laughter again rippled through the room.

"I'm really not sure what motivated me to join our chamber," he told the Cohasset group. "It was probably civic responsibility, or an attempt to kind of pay my dues and put back into the community some of the things that I had taken out. I have found it to be a very rewarding experience."

Ellis said he used the chamber as a sounding board. "I got tremendous counsel and I learned a lot.

"I also got some economic assistance from the South Shore Economic Development Commission," he added, "which is part of the South Shore chamber.

"That enabled me to buy the building that we've headquartered in, and buy it without any money.

"Anybody could have done it with money," he said, "but to do it without money was a great feat."

Ellis retraced the rocky road he travelled to corporate success.

Jerry Ellis

"I am a refugee from Hartford, Connecticut, who came to Boston to seek my fortune," he said. "I worked for Raymond's Department Store and left to open my own business in South Boston.

"It was called Sampson's Eighth Street Warehouse and it was a sensational idea, but the world wasn't ready for it yet and I fell flat on my face; it was a very trying experience."

He explained, while Building19's precursor didn't pan out, he learned a lot of interesting managerial techniques.

"I learned some high finance that they don't teach at Harvard," he said. "I was one of the best check hiders in America. I did all that stuff with 'The check is in the mail.'"

The audience chuckled.

"The next step," he said, "is if you owe them $1,000, you mail them a check for $20,000 made out to somebody else.

"Here's my best one," he added. "When they've really got you cornered and you've really got to pay 'em, and you've been through the wrong check and the "lost in the mail," and all your checks are on their fourth bounce, make out the check to the right party for exactly the right amount and mail it to the right address.

"But," he said, "put a little glue over your signature and squeeze the envelope a little."

The crowd roared with laughter.

"I went through some bad times," he said, "which probably changed my philosophy on life a little bit. I got to look at things, maybe in a jaded way."

He recalled, "I'll never forget the day a high-priced Boston lawyer came to call upon me and asked why his bill wasn't being paid.

"I told him, 'It's really nothing personal, nothing discriminatory. Your bill is in this barrel along with all the rest of them. And every month, I pull one out and pay it, regardless of size.'

He added, "'But if you give me a hard time, I'm going to take your name out of the barrel.'

"I thought that was kind of a smart thing to say, but he didn't think it was so good and he put an attachment on my house.

"Anyway," he said, "I ended up in bankruptcy. It was a great education. I don't recommend it to anybody, but you sure learn a lot about business. And you learn a lot about people."

Ellis said he recovered from failure at Sampson's and got a job at the Gem Stores.

"I worked there for a couple of years until they hurt my feelings; they said, 'You're fired.'

Ellis rose from rags to 'Good Stuff, Cheap!'

"No they didn't," he corrected himself. "That's not true. Actually, what they said was, 'As of next Monday, we're not going to pay you any more.' So I quit."

That day, Ellis took his first steps on the revival road of retail.

"Anyway," he said, "I had some cardboard boxes and I was cleaning some stuff out of my desk, deciding what I would steal er... uh, what was mine."

Cohasset's chamber chortled.

"And I got a call from a dear friend. It was Harry Andler, may he rest in peace; he was one of the most beautiful human beings ever to walk the face of this Earth," Ellis said.

"Harry asked me if I could sneak out to Westerly, Rhode Island to appraise a furniture store that had had a very serious fire. Well, I didn't tell him I didn't have a job or anything to do, so I said, 'Sure, I'll make the time for it Harry.'"

Ellis went down to Rhode Island and found "a beautiful furniture store where the stairs and the elevator and the roof had been burned out.

"But," he said, "if you looked inside, there was some excellent furniture."

Ellis and Andler formed a partnership, purchased the furniture and brought it to an abandonned warehouse at the old Hingham Shipyard, "the cheapest place we could find."

Ellis explained, "We really didn't have a name, but, there was a number painted on the building. So, being somewhat frugal, we decided there was no sense in paying for a new sign.

"It said 19 on it, so that's what we decided to call the business. And that's how we became Building 19."

When the store opened July 2, 1964, it operated only two days per week.

"My deal with Harry," he said, "was we would be partners until I got a job and we would only be open on Saturdays and Mondays. I figured nobody in Boston would give me a job; I'd have to go out of town, so I'd need the travel time."

He added, "I had to find an excuse for being open only two days-a-week, so we coined the expression, 'America's laziest and messiest department store.'

"It eventually dawned on me that I had the makings of a good business."

There are now seven Building 19s ranging in size from 60,000 square feet to 122,000 square feet "and I still haven't found a job," he joked.

Although Andler passed away about seven years ago, Ellis credits much of the company's success to his old partner.

"I think its success is really a great tribute to his high principles, his honesty and his understanding of people."

He explained, while the store handles primarily insurance salvage and advertises its merchandise in a deprecating fashion, most of it really is "Good stuff cheap," which is the slogan of Building 19.

Along with the "good stuff," bizarre items such as flyswatters with holes in them (To give a fly a sporting chance) and dashboard coin dispensers (Any change is an improvement), have made Building 19 famous and successful.

But Ellis pointed to management, especially employee-related programs, as the integral part of Building 19's strength.

Small knick-knacks or a few extra dollars commonly accompany employee paychecks, "because we want our employees to know that we're at least thinking of them and that we're acknowledging that it's their efforts that are making our company go."

The second program concerns communication. Ellis said he calls store meetings on a regular basis and he has put locked suggestion boxes in all Building 19s so he can get an undiluted information about employee complaints.

□Joseph Mazza, a sophomore at Cohasset High School, is participating in the Huntington Theatre Company's Young Critics Institute. The Young Critics Institute is a seven-week, after school program funded by Boston University and the National Endowment for the Humanities Youth Projects program. Working in a seminar format, students meet with Huntington actors directors, designers and scholars to analyze the play in production at the Huntington and the process of bringing it to life on the stage.

Mazza was one of 25 students selected to participate in the current Young Critics Program which is being held in coordination with the Huntington's production of Eric Overmyer's On The Verge. Mazza, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Mazza of Cohasset, has also appeared in three productions by Sarah Caldwell and studies at the New York Academy of Theatrical Arts.

Here's to a winning season for you all!

□ Here's an update on the new VFW Post that has recently been formed in Cohasset. They have already signed up 52 members, and expect to recruit at least 25 to 30 more. Most of the members and potential members are residents of Cohasset. As with any newly formed organization, there is a great need for funding, and the VFW is no exception. Because the VFW is a patriotic organization, as well as fraternal, flags play a very important part in the gatherings. They also make extensive use of flags in local ceremonies, parades, dedications, burials, etc. The VFW is aware that you receive many requests for funds from other worth-while organizations, but would like you to consider their needs for two reasons: first, their organization is local, and second, they are new with very limited funds and trying to build the organization. Thus, initial support from local businesses and townspeople is vital. Ralph Perroncello, Post Commander, assures you that any contribution you decide to send (fully tax deductible) will be used exclusively for their Flag Fund and will not go into the general treasury for any other purpose. The VFW hopes that you will give this request your serious consideration, and thanks you in advance for any contribution you may decide to send. REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES

THE CONDO ALTERNATIVE

If you feel priced out of the market for a single family home, a condominium may be a good alternative. Condos come in all shapes and sizes and their prices can often be very friendly to first-time buyers.

When you purchase a condo, it can be located in a large building, townhouse or garden apartment project. You own the unit in which you live and a proportional share of the "comon elements", such as roof, grounds, hallways, and recreational facilities. In addition to your mortgage, you also pay a monthly fee to cover your share of the project's upkeep. You and your neighbors form an owner's association and elect a board of directors to oversee the project's maintenance.

In most areas, condo buyers have a chance to examine the bylaws, budget, and other important documents before finalizing the sale. It's a good idea to understand any restrictions that may be placed on residents. Can you have pets? Are there restrictions on the owners' ability to rent their units should they decide to move? Your Realtor can give you information on the range of condos available in your area, and help you match price and life style to your needs!

If you're planning a move, call the professionals at HOME CENTER REALTY. Our number is 749-8833, or just drop by our offices at 57 Water St. in Hingham.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Kevin M. Neill, Chiropractic Physician

PAIN BEGETTING PAIN

One disease that frequently causes pain in the back and elsewhere is gout. It is an inherited disease. Because of a congenital error in metabolism, the body produces more uric acid that it can absorb in normal chemical processes or pass in the urine. The result is that urates, or uric acid salts, are deposited in various parts of the body, including the joints of the spine and hips. These chaulky deposits can seriously interfere with the mechanical working of the joint and cause a great deal of pain and inflammation. A side effect of taking aspirin for the pain is that it can elevate the concentration of uric acid in the blood. Thus, an unaware sufferer who swallows a lot of aspirin over a span of years may eventually develop severe symptoms.

Many discomforts that one experiences may react favorably to chiropractic applications. Such techniques may be described as enhancing the natural healing powers of Mother Nature herself. Providing such an impetus, the natural healing instructions are transmitted from the brain to every organ and extremity of the body. In this fashion much of the discomfort that one may experience can be effectively addressed. South Shore Arts Center summer programs

The summer session of courses at the South Shore Art Center will be in full swing the week of July 7.

New courses to be offered this summer are Judeth Van Hamm Wiers From Sketch to Exhibit, a course designed to deal with the creative process needed to transform reference material into art and Andrew Callahan The Art of Caricature designed to introduce students to the art of caricature. The first session of classes at the Center, 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset, runs the month of July and a second four-week session begins August 4. Advance registration is required for all classes and workshops on the summer schedule.

Wiers class will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays beginning July 8 from 7:30 p.m. to 10 p.m. She will work with her students on how to use sketches, photographs and slides in producing a finished piece of art. Students will learn how to recognize essential qualities of the material and how to deal with these in terms of size, color and design. The goal of the course will be for each participant to exhibit a finished work in August. Students should bring sketches to the first class.

Callahan's caricature class will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays beginning August 5 from 4 to 6 p.m. The introduction to the art of caricature will be achieved through the study of various artists and different styles of caricature. Callahan will instruct students in various techniques and methods used in caricature. This course is good for both adults and teenagers.

A face well recognized around the Center, that of David Tandy, will be back for the summer session to teach his popular courses, Introductory Painting and Introductory Drawing, both meeting on Mondays and Wednesday starting July 7, from 7:15 to 10:15 p.m. His courses are designed to give a good bases in both painting and drawing. In the painting course students will work with oils or acrylics and the emphasis will be on drawing, composition and image-making. Students will work directly from still life or model. Tandy will explore color, painting technique and form.

His drawing course is for the absolute beginner and anyone wishing a fundamental grounding in drawing skills, starting with mind-to-eye-to-hand coordination of motor skills and progressing to relationships of space, line and depth. He will explore with this class how and why to use line and mass in relation to a two-dimensional surface.

Albert Abany will teach Draw or Paint Landscape on Tuesdays and Thursdays beginning July 8 from 9:30 a.m. to noon. Students may opt to draw or paint outdoors at selected locations on the South Shore. Primary stress will focus on selecting, organizing and composing landscape elements to produce strong graphic statements in drawing and structural color organization in painting.

Virginia Avery will teach two sessions of her popular Outdoor Watercolor course, meeting on Wednesdays and Fridays beginning July 9 and again on August 6 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Her course is a series of lessons in watercolor helping the students to better develop needed painting skills. Individual attention will be geared to a student's abilities and desire to progress. A good course selection for all levels of artistic ability.

Paul Fortin will teach two photography courses, Beginning Photography on Mondays and Wednesdays beginning July 7 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. and Intermediate/Advanced Photography on Monday and Wednesdays beginning August 4 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. The beginning course will cover all the basics including F stops, shutter speeds, films, filter, composition, lighting, subjects, etc. Emphasis in this course is on recognizing the elements of good photography and applying them to the student's work.

In the next level course, students will explore various subjects including portrait, people and landscape. Fortin will focus on aesthetics, composition and approach needed to create a good photograph. Students may use black and white or color.

Susan Rodgerson will teach a children's course Paint and Draw Outside on Tuesdays and Thursdays starting July 15 from 4 to 5:30 p.m. Students will learn about design, composition and color using craypas, tempera and watercolors. Young artists will learn basic drawing and painting skills and work on projects geared to their age level. The class is designed for ages seven to eleven.

These summer session courses are in addition to the one-week intensives taking place in June, July and August. Combine summer studies with sun, sand and surf by enrolling in one of the South Shore Art Center offerings.

Prospective students may meet instructors and enroll in classes during the Center's summer arts festival "Celebration!" on the Cohasset Common, July 27, 28, and 29.

For a complete summer schedule of classes, call the Center, 383-9548.

Balancing the budget

Dust off your best town meeting hat, and grab a seat at the high school auditorium. The special edition of town meeting begins Monday, June 23 at 7:30 p.m.

What began as a meager number of important articles has expanded to nearly 40, although that number will be reduced when several are withdrawn from the floor of the town meeting.

The town employees' classification and compensation plan triggered the need for another edition of town meeting, along with the obligatory sewer articles which need endorsement before implementation.

Town employees have endorsed the new classification plan which was developed after months of interviews and study by consultant Caleb Marsh. Following extensive meetings with department heads and employees, the personnel committee supported the new salary schedules and compensation plan. It has been long overdue and seems to have quelled the frustrations of the town's employees.

The sewer commission is proposing a couple of articles dealing with the town's continuing fight to obtain a state-approved sewer plan. The commission said the connection with Hull is just about nearly approved and the revised Ward plan has been officially forwarded to the state for their endorsement.

The town hall addition, which most agree is a needed commodity, will cost the town about $900,000. Although many agree the present building is inadequate to serve the needs of employees and the public, many believe the price tag is too steep.

One million dollars is a hefty sum indeed when the town is facing other important money decisions in the near future, such as $425,000 for sewer service extensions, $500,000 for police and fire station renovations, $750,000 for Milliken Field repairs, and $250,000 for a transfer station at the landfill.

Just like a household budget, we must prioritize our expenses, always mindful of the balance we have in the bank. There are options for the town to obtain more revenues, but nothing can salvage all these programs and expenditures.

It's up to the individual voter to decide whether town hall is in more desperate conditions than our ballfields, if the Ward sewer plan is more vital than repairing the walls at the high school and building a transfer station to extend the life of our limited landfill area.

It's not comforting to know we must balance one request against the other, but that is what big business is about. One priority must outweigh another—one budget request will ultimately be funded in favor of another. One side wins, one side may be pushed aside temporarily, and another may lose.

Running a town is big business. Each voter at town meeting is a member of the board of directors. We each hold an equal share in this corporation.

Voters urged to defeat Article 15

Letters

To the Editor:

No one ever imagined sewering the Town of Cohasset could become so complex. It has become complex for many reasons. An awful lot of money is at stake for many people. Interests range from the individual homeowner who needs his home sewered, to the owners of undeveloped or partially-developed land. The latter individuals would benefit significantly if their land were sewered. Additionally, there are some who believe that only big is better, while others believe the contrary.

If Mr. R.M. Campbell's warrant article for yet another sewer study is approved, I would suggest the Town not hire an engineering company to perform the study. Approval of this warrant article would strongly suggest the need for an impartial arbitrator, who would determine the facts.

I have researched the facts and offer the following for your consideration:

On May 16, 1983 John Chalas, Senior V.P. of Metcalf & Eddy (M&E) stated the construction of Phase I sewering and a 700,000 gallon per day plant would be $14,146,000. This figure did not incorporate house connections estimated by M&E to range from $200 to $1,375. The number of lots to be hooked up is 579 plus 202 already on sewer. Allowing for inflation, that $14,146,000 is now approximately $14,800,000. The cost of 579 hookups at $800 per hookup is $463,000. The total cost, therefore, to sewer 202 already-sewered lots plus 579 new lots is $15,260,000, $19,539 per lot.

The latest Ward Plan, dated June 9, 1986 proposes 610 new lots connected at a cost of $4,799,000. With the addition of Brewster Road and 3A the Ward Plan costs $6,728,000. The ultimate projected sewer flow with all lots connected, including 3A and Brewster Road, is 275,000 gallons per day. Regardless of funding, these are the costs of the two plans.

The next question citizens are asking is how much must the Town pay? M&E says we must pay $3.47 million, plus an additional $800/per hookup ($800 x 579). The total M&E local cost is $3.9 million. The total local cost of Ward, with 3A and Brewster, is $3.3 million. Additionally, the Ward Plan includes town-funded on-site repairs, M&E does not.

Since the amount to be paid by the Town, annually, is as important as construction costs, the following applies:

M&E says the annual Operating and Maintenance (O&M) for 700,000 gpd will be $174,000 a year. Ward says the annual O&M for 300,000 gpd will be $131,000 a year.

Therefore, our hired arbitrator will have to investigate these estimates carefully to determine their reliability. An investigation of existing O&M costs will yield the following information:

Cohasset currently pays $120,000/year; Scituate-$261,000; Marshfield-$380,000; Hull-$515,000; Rockland-$680,000.

Another important consideration for the arbitrator will be plant size. M&E says we need 700,000 gpd, Ward says we need 300,000 gpd. If you allow 75 gallons of sewerage per day per person the Ward plan will serve 4,000 people and the M&E plan will serve 9,300 people. Remember, this population is confined only to the proposed sewer district.

Lastly, resources and environment must be considered. Should Cohasset use up some of its limited land resources for a sewer treatment plant? Should Cohasset pump 700,000 gallons per day of treated sewerage into the shallow ocean less than 1/3 mile, off the coast? Should Federal, State and local governments spend more than $15 million to sewer Cohasset when $7 million will do the job?

At the June 23 Special Town Meeting you will be the arbitrator. You will be asked to deliberate and come to a conclusion on large versus small . . . expansive vs. conservative, with some serious consideration given to the environmental question.

I urge you to vote against the R.M. Campbell article calling for an additional sewer study.

Cohasset was great in the good old days

To the Editor:

Being a rather old townie, and proud to be classified as such, I have very much enjoyed the series of old "Who, What or Where" pictures you have printed for your subscribers to identify. Being especially touched by the picture of Mr. Thomas Loney in the June 5th issue of the Mariner I have been moved to write these few lines.

Your pictures shows Mr. Loney with his horse and wagon which he drove to pick up "swill" for his pigs which he kept at his piggery in Howes or Whitney Woods. The vivid memory I have of the last time I saw Mr. Loney was when he was in handcuffs fastened to a chain on a flatbed wagon pulled by a team of horses that was taking Mr. Loney to the lockup which was in the cellar of the Town Hall. I believe Mr. Loney had imbibed in too much fermented grape juice, hard cider or some other pain killer that was commonly used in those days. I believe the cells still remain beneath the Town Hall, and if you have ever seen them you will know it was not a pleasant place to rest. I was a young boy about eight years old when I witnessed this frightening incident which would place it at about 1913.

Mr. Loney had a competitor for the local "swill" business, a big husky man by the name of John McCormack who pushed a big wheelbarrow with a barrel on it around the village gathering food for his pigs.

Yes Mr. Editor we really had it good in Cohasset in the old days, free garbage pickup, two big livery stables (followed by two taxi companies) train transportation, and local dairies that sold milk with so much cream on it that it could be poured off and whipped for good old strawberry shortcake. Those were the good old days.

School Committee is pulling a public relations number

To the Editor:
An Open Letter to the Cohasset School Committee:

Here we go again! Another classic example of an elected board's insensitivity and lack of respect to the people who put them into office. Obviously, the members of the School Committee feel that once they fool their constituents into believing they will work only for the good of our children and get themselves elected, they can just go off their own ways and ignore the wishes of the parents.

There is no way in a hundred years the School Committee can ever justify their treatment of such a fine administrator and teacher as Mr. Di. Here is a man with over 25 years experience working with our children. A man who, over these years, has earned the love and respect of all his students and their parents. A man who has the reputation of being a strict and fair disciplinarian. A man who has cared so deeply for the welfare of his students, and showed his caring in so many countless ways. A man who deserved so much better from the people with whom he has worked for so many years.

In the aftermath of the School Superintendent's appointment, I suppose, if one tries hard enough, one can understand the actions of the School Committee. Although nobody can fault Mr. Hart's qualifications for the position, we as parents have every right to raise our voices over the sneaky and shabby way the appointment was made. The School Committee saw no problem with "promoting from within the ranks" to fill the position of school superintendent and his assistant. Why then, in God's name, with such a qualified man as Mr. Di to step in as principal, did they feel they had to go such lengths as to appoint a "search committee?" Did they truly feel that after all his years of experience, he wasn't qualified? Did they forget his tenure as acting principal, and the fine job he did in that position? Did they overlook all his years as a highly visible assistant-principal?

I think not. I believe the members of the School Commttee used this way to make up for the major mistake they made in the manner in which they appointed a new superintendent. It is a way to say to the students and their parents, "Look how honest and open we are." And, in the process of trying to pull a "public relations number" on us, they have succeeded in sacrificing a perfectly wonderful educator and administrator, and depriving our kids of Mr. Di's kind and strong leadership.

Members of the School Committee — FOR SHAME! You chose to ignore a perfectly legitimate citizen's petition carrying over 1,000 signatures of concerned and interested parents. This petition requested you to use the authority of your office to over-rule the recommendation of a mere 30 people. You chose to make this uncomfortable bed for yourselves; now you can lie in it.

My last child just graduated from C.H.S. I regret to say that I am relieved I have no more children to have to pass through a school system run by such shortsighted and self-serving individuals.

Whatever my single vote might count for, let it be known here, now and publicly, that the present members of the School Committee have seen their last vote from me. And I bid the members to remember the 1,000 names on the petition; for I am sure each person who signed it will remember each of you at the voting polls.

Support Article 15

To the Editor:

Enclosed is a photocopy of Mr. Edward Guild's letter published May 1. It contains the sentence: "This contrasts with the projected town cost of $4,600,000 for the previous plan (Metcalf and Eddy) which would have served only a third of the town."

Despite the fancy footwork in Mr. Guild's letter of June 5, it appears that he said what Mr. R.M. Campbell said he said. Mr. Campbell also pointed out that the figure was too low since it is applicable to phase 1 of M & E, not to 1/3 of the town. That the Sewer Commission can't or won't recognize its error, especially when correcting it would bolster their argument for the Ward Plan, doesn't indicate a good grasp of the matter. How many other numbers are incorrect, and just as stubbornly defended?

We now have an opportunity to search for answers in the context of an engineering analysis of our current sewer options. Town Meeting support June 23 of Article 15 will provide for such a reassessment while there is still time.

W.M. Sullivan

Poskus okayed fence

To the Editor:

In reference to comments made in this week's Cohasset Mariner by former building inspector Poskus, we would like to point out that the section of six foot fence in question was erected in May 1985 with his full knowledge and approval, as evidenced by the official permit bearing his signature. Had he then restricted the fence to a five foot limitation, a five foot fence would have been built; he did not do so.

Furthermore, if the cognizant town official responsible for the issuance of building permits cannot guarantee their validity, of what need is there for a permit at all? Finally, we feel that the implementation of this alleged zoning bylaw has been capricious, inequitable, and discriminatory, reflecting little credit on this beautiful town we are proud to call home.

Catherine W. Richards

The best alternative

To the Editor,

The June 23 town meeting will have to deal with several articles which propose expenditures of large sums.

Article 15 proposes an inexpensive reassessment of our sewer options, before we proceed further on a plan which is expensive but does not serve the town well. It's promoted as a cost effective solution to pollution. But its inadequacies may result in much more expense later. Better we should do it well the first time.

Support Article 15, so that we can better determine what is best for the town in the long run.

Scoop on Souppes

Elizabeth Warren, Secretary of the Cultural Exchange Committee, has received many inquiries regarding the nature of the Cultural Exchange Program. In response to those questions most often asked, Miss Warren offers the following replies.

My family and I will be travelling in France during the month of October and we would like to spend a few days visiting Souppes. How can we make arrangements? The Committee has on file several profiles of Souppes families who are interested in participating in the Exchange Program, either as hosts or visitors. You are welcome to peruse the files to find a family you think you would like to spend some time with. You would then contact them directly.

My son and two friends will be backpacking throughout Europe this summer. Can they plan on spending some time in Souppes? We can provide you with several names and addresses of families who would welcome the young backpackers. However, should the timing of your son's visit be inconvenient, the Souppes Cultural Exchange Committee would accommodate your needs.

My daughter is a sophomore in college and would like to take a year off from her studies and live abroad. What are the possibilities of connecting with a family in Souppes? Although at the moment we have no applications from Souppes for a year long exchange, there is no reason why we could not initiate one. Again, we would forward your application to Monsieur Dine, Chairman of the Souppes Cultural Exchange Committee and he would make the appropriate contacts for you.

My family and I are interested in arranging a house swap with a French family next year for three weeks. How might we explore Souppes for possibilities? Several inquiries have come in regarding house swaps. The procedure would be to fill out an application complete with all necessary details and we would send it on to Souppes.

Why was Souppes-sur-Loing chosen as Cohasset's sister city? In August, 1894, Cohasset Selectmen officially proclaimed kinship with Souppes. The bond was suggested by Cohasset resident Thomas Churchill, who led the 8th Tank Battalion in liberating Souppes during World War II.

If we opened our home to a family or individual from Souppes, what would we do with them? The arrangements you make with your exchange would be completely up to you. With a few young exceptions, applicants are individuals over nineteen years of age or small families—a few are couples without children.

What is the purpose of the Mayor's visit this month? The Mayor and the Chairman of Souppes Cultural Exchange Committee are visiting this month to officially establish kinship and open communications between our two towns.

How can I get in touch with a family from Souppes to explore possible exchange opportunities? You are free to look through the files we currently have or arrange for me to research it for you. You should certainly make a point of visiting with Monsieur Dine during his stay here this month. There will be several opportunities for you to meet with him.

Do I have to speak French to participate in the Cultural Exchange Program? Absolutely not. Many people are participating because they want to learn the French language or simply because they want to learn more about the culture. All French students are required to study English so communication presents no serious barrier.

For further information on the Cultural Exchange Program, telephone Elizabeth Warren, 383-0336.

Historical museums to open

The Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum and Capt. John Wilson Historical House at Cohasset Center will open for the summer season on Saturday, June 28.

They will remain open through the end of September. Hours will be from 1:30 to 4:30 each afternoon except Mondays. Admission to the Maritime Museum and Capt. Wilson House is 75¢ per building for adults; 25¢ per building for children ages 6 to 12 years; Society members and their guests, no charge.

Souppes -sur-Loing mayor to arrive

Less than a week remains before the mayor of Souppes-sur-Loing arrives in Cohasset, and the town is busily preparing for this important initial visit from French kin.

June 25, the Prudhommes and Dines will meet their host families, Mr. and Mrs. John Manning and Mr. and Mrs. Peter Pearce.

Thursday morning John Hagerty will take them on a tour of Cohasset Colonial's early American furniture design, followed by luncheon at the home of Elizabeth Warren. In the afternoon, the Cohasset Garden Club will conduct a private showing of special seaside gardens. Tea at the home of Rita Kirk will conclude the tour.

Friday, the Prudhommes and Dines will visit Plimoth Plantation and in the evening dine with Cohasset friends at Kimballs-by-the-Sea.

A town-wide reception at the Lothrop House on Saturday, June 28, from 5 to 6:30 p.m., will provide everyone with the opportunity to become acquainted with sister city Souppes-sur-Loing. Dress is "come as you are"—whether it be fresh from gardening, sailing or beaching. Wine and soft drinks are compliments of Peter Logan of Cohasset Liquors and hors d'oeuvres will be served. Elizabeth Warren, secretary of the Cultural Exchange Committee, urges "all of Cohasset townspeople to drop by and make this moment in the mayor's visit a truly meaningful Cohasset experience. The reception will be followed by dinner at the home of Robin and Marylou Lawrence.

Sunday, June 29, the French visitors will leave for New York City and return to Cohasset Wednesday, July 2.

Fourth of July will be celebrated at the home of Mildred and Clifford Mitman with American style picnic and fireworks.

The Music Circus has invited the mayor, his guests and their host families to the Roy Clark concert Sunday, July 6. A cookout will follow at the home of Peter and Judy Keim.

Anyone who is interested in participating in the week's events should contact Judy Keim, 383-1026. In addition, the Cultural Exchange Committee is open to suggestions regarding other activities that may have a special Cohasset/New England flavor.

Monday, July 7, marks the mayor's departure and what promises to be the beginning of a long, fruitful relationship between the two sister cities.

June 23 warrant filled with 'big money ' requests though commission chairman Charles DeSantis predicted approval of the plan by the state, the revised Ward plan has yet to receive official sanction.

Article 19, which requests approval of $10,000 for the town's share in the state inflow-infiltration rehabilitation program, received the support of the advisory committee and selectmen. The money will not be expanded until they receive the expected 64 percent state funding for the program.

Among the other articles included in the June 23 warrant is a request to change the zoning bylaw by including the word "commercial" when describing a place where more than four dogs are raised and bred for commercial profit.

Selectmen voted not to recommend the article which by its language would allow an unlimited number of dogs to be raised in a private residence without a permit because they were not bred specifically for a profit.

Planning board chairman Christine Bassett explained the board's sponsorship of article 39 which requests approval of the federal floodplain map. Although Bassett admitted there are deficiencies on the federal map, approval is needed in order for the town to make the Sept. 29 cutoff for federal flood insurance eligibility. "By adopting this FEMA map," she said, "does not mean the negation of our current floodplain district and accompanying map. We want to accept it so the town of Cohasset can participate in the federal flood insurance program."

Beach Street resident Jeanne Gormley protested approval of the map, saying it is incorrect and contains erroneous information and benchmarkings along Little Harbor. Bassett agreed the map needed revisions, but noted acceptance of the federal map is a "stop-gap" measure until the planning board has the time to review the map in greater detail and make appropriate changes.

Selectmen delayed a decision Monday night on the proposal to transfer 24 acres of school-owned land to the housing authority. Monday night the school committee accepted the recommendation of transferring two acres of the land. The proposal by the housing authority is to locate a residence for eight mentally retarded adults.

The authority requested the 24 acres in order to complete engineering studies and locate the best area on which to build the intermediate care facility. The school facilities committee said two acres was sufficient, and that the bulk of the 60-acre property should remain in the school department's jurisdiction in the event expansion of the Deer Hill School is necessary.

The housing authority was scheduled to meet this week to review the school committee's recommendation. Once the authority takes a vote on the issue, selectmen will decide whether to support the warrant article.

Town employees will be interested in the fate of several articles dealing with the new employee classification system. Several town hall positions will be reclassified under the new plan devised by consultant Caleb Marsh of Hingham. The town hall employees have issued their endorsement of the new personnel plan.

Vo-Tech approves dress code

The South Shore Regional School Committee last week approved a dress code that infringes upon students' rights, according to a specialist in the state Department of Education.

But administrator Warren Anderson, who drafted the dress code with members of the South Shore Vocational Technical High School student council, said the code is supported by a 1973 court case.

The new dress code, which will go into effect next school year during the academic weeks, says that all decals on clothing must be "in good taste." Pants must be "clean, in sound condition, without holes or patches, and such not to attract undue attention."

Girls' tops "must not attract undue attention," and halter and tube tops are prohibited unless covered by a closed shirt. V-necks are allowed, but cannot go more than three inches below the collarbone.

Skirts and dresses above the knee and shorts are not acceptable.

Boys may not wear "undershirt styles" including thermal shirts and white t-shirts. Hats and headgear are not permitted.

Marylou Anderson, an education specialist with the Department of Education's bureau of student, community and adult services, said this week that the code violates students' constitutional rights under the Fourteenth Amendment.

"A school committee cannot outlaw poor taste," she said. "It's that simple. Good taste, whatever that means, is not a legitimate reason to ban certain clothes."

She cited a guide to student rights published by the department that says, "The Fourteenth Amendment protects your right to choose hair length, clothing, and other aspects of your appearance."

A school cannot interfere with this right unless there is an overriding, legitimate school purpose which the school can show to be more important than this right, according to the handbook.

The handbook adds that "neatness" and "good judgement" are not legitimate reasons for the administration to regulate students' appearances.

Warren Anderson said that the dress code was looked at after students complained that it was out of date. Anderson met several times with student council representatives to revise the code.

Mr. Anderson said that the dress code is in place to make a good impression on recruiters who look for employees from the student body.

"It seems to me that it's the obligation of a vocational school to see our students employed," he said. "We cannot just run them through courses and let them go.

"The students have to look and act responsible to potential employers in industry," he said, "or they won't be hired."

Congressman Studds favors national tax code changes

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Congressman Gerry Studds Saturday told the citizens of Hingham he supports a bill which would reform the national tax code, eliminating many present deductions and exemptions.

He explained, "One of the real arguments I think most people would agree, more or less along the lines of either the house or senate bill, is that if we can purge the tax code of the reams of special provisions, deductions, exemptions and preferential treatments, we can get to the point where business people, entrepreneurs and venture capitalists make their decisions based upon economic, rather than tax considerations."

Studds said, under the present tax code, entrepreneurs too often base their decisions on what makes sense in terms of minimizing tax obligations.

"If there were a way to give preferential tax treatments solely to those investments which indeed stimulate an industry and produce jobs," he added, "I think it would be worthy of consideration. The tax code has never done that."

He explained, "The tax code gives you a special break if for example, you buy GM (General Motors) at 10 and sell it next year at 20. You pay less taxes on that capital gain than if you went out and earned that $10,000 or whatever.

"I don't think that's fair and I don't think it makes economic sense."

He added, "It would be entirely different economically I think, if you or I went out and bought on a real venture and at a real risk, newly issued stock of a venture that was raising capital, but that's not what most of the capital gains in this country are.

"Most of them," he said, "are the buying and selling of existing pieces of paper, with zero impact on anybody but the stock market as far as I can see."

Studds told the folks in Town Hall's packed auditorium he is surprised at the level of support tax reform has received.

"Astonishingly, most people who represent business groups in Washington are supporting the tax bills," he said. "Most of the people who you would think would view themselves as the principal beneficiaries of these special provisions of the past, have turned around almost without exception.

"One has to wonder," he added,"since you've got the extraordinary breadth of support, what you have. Business, labor, people of all ranges of income...

"Now I grant you the odds are against it," he said with a smile, "but it's at least possible the congress is on the verge of doing something right!

"I'm surprised."

Studds said there are possible difficulties within tax reform concerning private investments in things such as subsidized housing, which benefit under the current code.

"Every single provision of the existing tax code was put there initially for a reason," he explained. "Generally, although not always, the reason was couched in terms of the public interest, some desirable goal they wanted to create a tax incentive toward. Public housing is a classic example.

"It remains to be seen," he said, "if we do away with most or all of those things, and what the consequences of that would be. Under the simplified tax code, what will happen when you get most of those things out of there, nobody knows."

He cautioned the investors.

"It's a little premature to panic at this stage," he said. "We know what the house bill looks like, but we don't know for sure what the senate conference vehicle will look like. When they get to conference, we still won't know what the final bill will look like."

He added, "So, unless you happen to be a personal friend of a conferee, I would hold back because life is short and we might as well concentrate on those things we can really affect.

"When we get a final version," he said, "the house no longer has any say whatever, except to vote yes or no on the final package."

He added, "The only thing that is certain in that conference committee, is that if a provision is identical in both the house and senate bill, it's not subject to conference and will not be changed. Otherwise, virtually anything can happen in the conference on taxes, literally almost anything."

Studds explained, theoretically, either the house or the senate could reject the conference report and send it back to conference withinstructionsfor their conferees to insist on a particular point, but neither could amend it outside of the joint conference.

Studds said he believes such action would be unlikely.

"The pressures on this one will be extraordinary," he said. "There are strong political pressures from the president and the leadership of the senate to try to hold it intact."

Studds pointed to a lack of pork-barreling, which often accompanys tax proposals.

"The fact," he said, "that there appears to be no major amendment adopted on the floor of the senate to a tax bill is unheard of, absolutely unheard of."

Red tide alert

The taking of shellfish from the waters and flats of Cohasset has been prohibited by the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) until further notice.

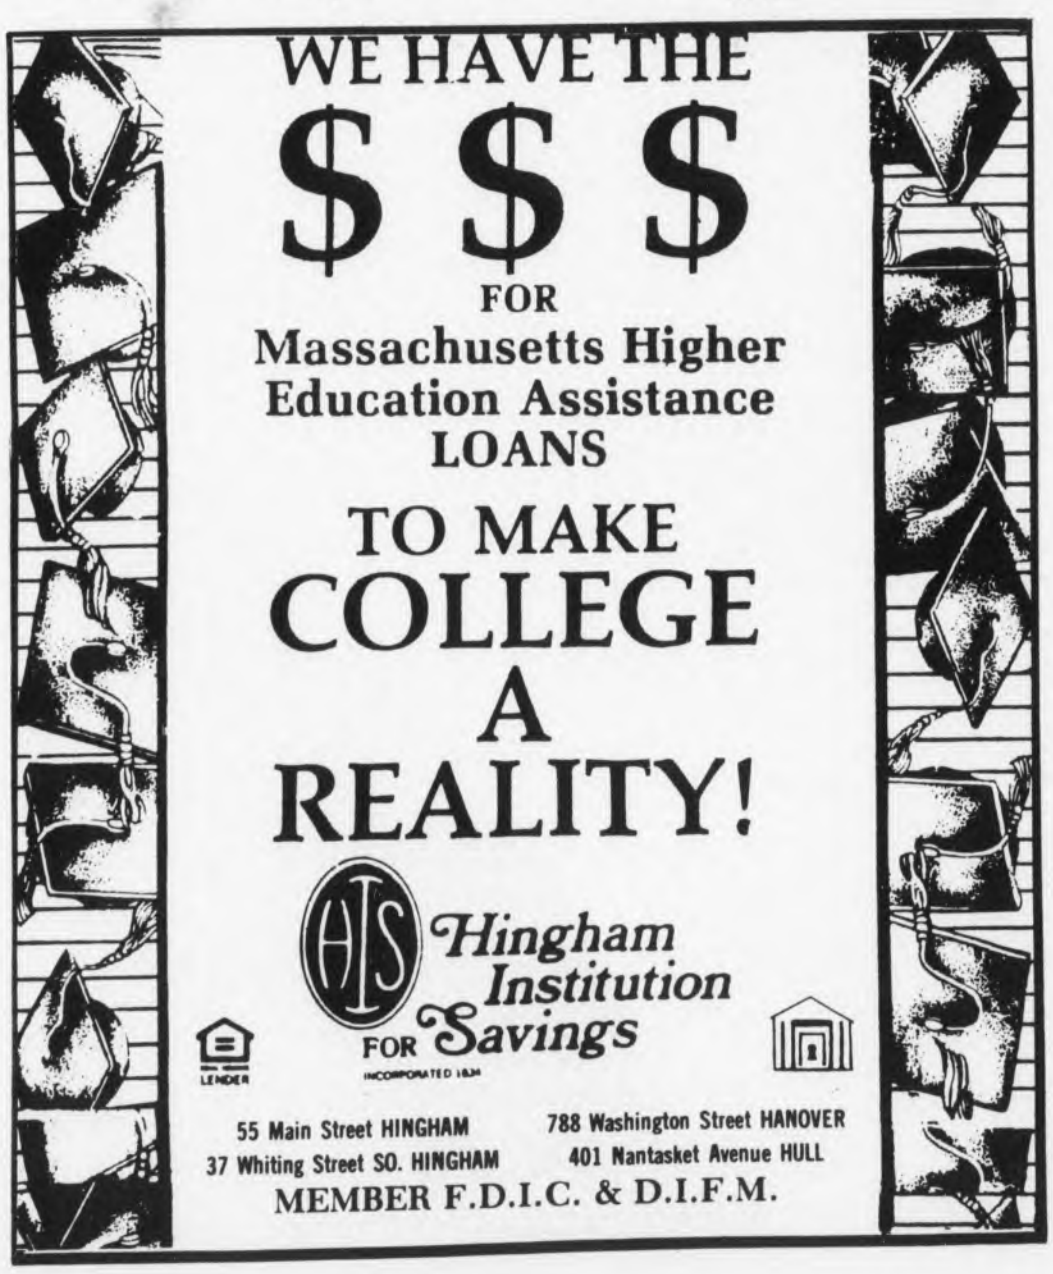
DEQE has prohibited the taking of shellfish from waters and flats from the Cohasset-Hull town line to Manomet Point in Plymouth. The ban includes the towns of Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield, Duxbury and Plymouth.

DEQE has determined that certain shellfish contain high levels of Paralytic Shellfish Poison (P.S.P.) and has declared all species of shellfish unfit for food purposes until further notice.

"P.S.P. used to be called red tide," said DEQE Regional Engineer Paul Anderson. "I guess the public understands that term.

"The toxin is generated in the shellfish when they eat a certain algae that blooms in salt water," he said. "The decomposition of the algae inside the shellfish creates the toxin."

Anderson said the toxin does not kill the shellfish, but is hazardous to humans. Tingling in the lips, fingers and toes are signs of ingestion of the toxin, which can cause respiratory failure or paralysis.



Long-range growth seminar set for Sept. 13

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

The South Shore Coalition will hold a day-long seminar Saturday, Sept. 13 for local officials concerned with long-range growth issues.

Representatives to the coalition Thursday voted to hold the meeting as early as possible in the fall so it does not conflict with other activities.

Coalition Executive Director Jean Christensen of Marshfield estimated attendance at between 250 and 300. A location has not been set, but representatives from Norwell, Scituate and Cohasset will seek permission from local school boards to use a high school in one of the towns.

Growth-policy decisionmakers in the 10 member towns will hear experts and state officials outline local responsibilities as they conduct day-to-day business.

The coalition will invite selectmen, planning-board members, conservation commissioners and members of housing authorities, health boards, water and sewer authorities, industrial-development commissions and growth-policy panels to the day-long seminar.

Details of the day's activities are being planned. Christensen said officials of the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) have suggested an hour-long lecture on wetlands protection, to be followed by a bus trip to the shoreline for a brief tour of coastal wetlands.

DEQE oversees environmental issues across the state, but acknowledges that the majority of decisions affecting wetlands — important to the quality of water supplies — are made at the local level, she said.

Christensen also asked members to consider residents with expertise on growth issues and submit their names for consideration in the seminar.

State Sen. William B. Golden (D-Weymouth) — a leading founder of the coalition a year ago — proposed the seminar earlier this spring. He envisioned an information session that would give local board members an appreciation for the relationships between boards in a community and the community to its neighbors.

The seminar should include major issues such as regional transportation, solid waste, affordable housing and water quality, he said.

"As a region, we need to address these issues, and the way to start is to give each board member an appreciation of his or her responsibilities," Golden said at the time.

Boards whose members will be invited to the conference should receive several letters urging attendance in the next three months, said Selectman John Silva of Hull.

Housing dilemma

Methods of increasing affordable housing should be at the forefront of discussions at the seminar, Christensen said.

"Gov. (Michael S.) Dukakis urged us to find ways of increasing low- and moderate-income housing units" in a conversation June 3, she said.

Representatives of Norwell and Weymouth then outlined problems unique to their communities.

"The feeling in Weymouth is that the town must carry the burden of affordable housing on the South Shore because it is fully sewered," said Selectman Brian J. McDonald.

"Somthing like 9.3 percent of our units are designated for low- or moderate-income families. Many people feel that a number of our tenants come from outside town."

McDonald said the housing authority will survey tenants to determine whether they are former residents of the town or elsewhere.

Of the 19,000 housing units in town, about 1,600 are designated for qualifying families.

But Norwell Selectman Constance L. Hughes indicated many South Shore towns are caught in a bind between affordable housing and water-quality protection.

"Norwell simply does not have good ground for septic systems — we have cases of $300,000 to $400,000 homes with systems that are barely adequate," she said.

"I feel badly about it. We aren't attempting to keep 'snob zoning,' we're trying to comply with state guidelines to protect water supplies" in a town that relies totally on groundwater, Huges added.

Selectman Gerald S. Dwight of Scituate expressed regret that South Shore towns did not take advantage of federal aid for sewer construction that was plentiful in the 1960s and early 1970s.

"We could have sewered all of Plymouth County at the time," he said.

In addition to Weymouth, portions of Hingham and Scituate are sewered. Other coalition towns rely on private septic systems to dispose of wastewater.

Cheaper purchasing

The group-purchasing subcommittee of the coalition will soon survey department heads in member towns for information on the best methods of group purchasing, McDonald said.

The subcommittee will send a letter and one-page survey form to department heads and others involved with purchasing, seeking suggestions for group purchasing, the amount of fuel the department uses each year, why cooperative buying would benefit the department or why the department would not participate.

McDonald chairs the subcommittee that also includes Silva, John Brady of Hingham and Selectman Diane Sullivan of Cohasset.

In other business last week, coalition members also voted to join Golden's "Save the Harbor, Save the Bay" coalition and to support Hull in its bid to become a member of the state Water Resources Authority advisory board.

"The future of the harbor and bay affects each and every one of us," Silva said.

Pow wow at science center

Chief One Bear and his people will be at the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell on Saturday, June 28 and Sunday, June 29 from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. The public is invited to watch tribal dancing, purchase Indian crafts and learn more of the rich heritage of our local Native Americans.

Performances will be at 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. on Saturday and at 2 p.m. on Sunday. Admission donation for adults is 99 cents and 50 cents for children. Refreshments will be sold.

South Shore Natural Science Center is on Jacobs Lane in Norwell, just off Route 123 and is open 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Mondays through Saturdays and 1 to 4 p.m. Sundays and most holidays.

Merchants eagerly await summer business boom. . .

ing the entire movie crew is just about impossible during the last two weeks in July.

"We're under a strain during that time, no doubt about it," Leahy said. "But I'm sure we'll be able to get some bookings in."

In the meantime, the cast and crew of "Witches" will stay in a Boston hotel. "But I have a feeling, and this is just an assumption on my part, that they'll get a little tired of the commute from Boston. Once they get caught in that traffic, I think they'll find the convenience of a small inn far outweighs the luxury of a Boston hotel."

Kimball's is quite accustomed to housing the stars that travel through Cohasset. Every summer, about 90 percent of the Music Circus performers stay at the seaside inn.

"There are always a few exceptions, like Wayne Newton and Johnny Mathis. Newton has such an extraordinary number of security men, he needs a much larger accommodation," Leahy explained.

Spotting the stars is a summertime tradition at Kimball's where bystanders wait to catch a glimpse of the performer as he or she heads from the motel to the Sohier Street tent.

"The bystanders in Cohasset have always been very respectful of the performers," he noted. "And the stars who stay here are very accustomed to the bystanders. Jim Nabors sits right in the front lobby here every afternoon and reads the newspaper. Dom Deluise took the show over here. He gets behind the front desk and acts like a bellboy. Last year he served coffee on the patio to our guests. Once he and Phyllis Diller had a party that most of our guests found very memorable."

The residual effect of Cohasset's movie will be a greater demand for rooms at the local inn. In the last two weeks, Leahy said, the motel has accepted 18 bookings a day. "We get callers who say, what are your rates, do you have any rooms, and how can I get cast in the movie?" he said.

For the downtown merchants, the movie will mean disruption and chaos. They can't wait.

Dick and Sue Straley, the owners of Cards 'n Shards, have placed a bulletin board on the wall. It's gradually being filled with daily newspaper stories about the anticipated arrival of "Witches."

The South Main Street store is described by its owners as a "mini department store." Inside the antique building which once housed a Cohasset sea captain, there are delicately scented candles, colorful greeting cards, handpainted furniture, and crisp white summer dresses and skirts.

In late July, the aromas of this store will be transformed from bayberry and lavender to salami and liverwurst. The Straley's store is scheduled to be a delicatessen.

"I don't mind a bit," Dick Straley stated. "Hey, it's a once in a lifetime thing. I'm excited about it."

When asked if he anticipates any problems reverting the delicatessen back to the card and clothing shop, he answered, "No. I'm a professional and so are they. I expect they know exactly what they're doing. They've given us every assurance the store will be returned to its original state.

"But maybe before I leave I should take the money out of the cash register."

Warner Brothers officials, including location manager Samuel Mercer, have met three times with the Straleys. They expect a contract will be offered this week. Although no specific timetable has been established, the Straleys believe the store will be closed for business for one to three days in July.

"I'm excited, you have to be. This is a once in a lifetime opportunity for Cohasset," Dick said. Sue added, "I couldn't believe they wanted to use our store. We'll be watching the whole thing, and we'll probably have the transformation video-taped," she added.

Dick said he has yet to read the John Updike novel. "Although a friend of mine read it and shared some of the passages with me. I didn't find it too distasteful. "

Dick said without hesitation he would like to have a small part in the film. Sue was a bit more reluctant, but admitted she could be persuaded to accept a part as a clerk in the delicatessen. "Why not?" Dick joked. "Absolutely!"

The Straley's comfortable store is an antique listed with the national historic register. "I think this building has a lot of character and individuality. I think that's what attracted Warner Brothers to this location," Dick stated.

Next door to Cards 'n Shards is Hernan's hair salon. Owner Hernan Rodriguez is as pleased as his neighbors that his shop will be used in the film.

"I'm not sure exactly what they want to use the shop for," he said this week. "But I think they want to use some of it as an ice cream store, and part they will keep as a hair salon. They told me they liked the look of the shop."

Rodriguez, who bought the airy, contemporary store a year and a half ago, is similarly excited about the anticipated project. "I don't know how long they'll have to use the store. That will be included in the contract, I guess," he said, noting the film company will advertise the anticipated closing dates of the store.

"There's going to be a lot of commotion here," he predicted. "But I think it will help a lot of businesses here. People hanging around and watching will be shopping in Cohasset. It will be good for us. Maybe there's a possibility they will use me as a hair stylist. That would be very exciting. I would definitely do that!"

June Stonier, the owner of South Main Street's Red Balloon, is eager to see the film crews arrive downtown.

"Jack Nicholson's great!" she exclaimed, noting the film's superstar is not expected to take part in any of the scenes at the Red Balloon.

For the movie, the children's toy and clothing shop will be made into a newspaper office. "They liked the big front windows," she explained. "From what I understand, they may use the front part of the store as the business office of the newspaper, and they may use the upstairs room as the newsroom."

"This is going to be fun. And it's going to make here more exciting," she predicted. "We'll be closed down for a couple of days, and they'll be lots of traffic. But I'm sure everything will work out."

No contracts have been signed, she said, but the movie company will reimburse her for the loss of business while filming. "I hope it won't be more than three days," she added. "It's such a busy time of the year to be closed."

Already, June said, the notoriety has begun. Old friends and customers greet her with the salutation, "Hi celebrity!"

Warner exec: Cohasset was best choice

"Right now we are trying to put together a gameplan," he said. "We're trying to reconstruct exactly what should happen and when. Then we can get back to the merchants with a schedule."

In addition to the Cohasset filming, Mercer said there will be additional scenes shot in Hingham. "They'll be no interior filming in Hingham," he confirmed. "But we plan to do some exterior shots."

Back in Cohasset, Mercer said the film crews will be allowed within a few homes. "We've had preliminary discussions with some homeowners, but no contracts have been signed. We've been told we will be able to film inside the homes," he said.

Mercer described the process as "piecing together a giant puzzle." Locations have to be matched with approvals from residents and businessmen, time schedules have to be established and the movie company has to approve each step. "There are a lot of pieces to build exactly what you want," he explained.

"Updike, who is a Massachusetts resident, must have put a lot of research into the background of his book," Mercer commented. "He obviously drew upon a lot of the communities he has visited."

Filming in Cohassset will begin around July 14 and conclude two or more weeks later. "It's hard to define at this point," he said. "We usually split up the filming - one day here, and the next day there. We're probably looking at a total of six to eight weeks in the state. We'll know more when the filming schedule is finalized."

Bystanders, interested in catching a glimpse of a movie star will not be disappointed. "They will see movie stars," Mercer confirmed. "There'll be lots of lights, cameras and crews working on the major exterior shots. I think people will be pleasantly surprised to see how a movie is made. It's interesting to see how a movie is done scene by scene."

Warner Brothers will have specific people working with the community to coordinate site locations and casting calls. There will be no advertisement or announcements of where the crews will be filming from day to day. "People will just have to watch where we are going," Mercer said. "We really try not to be disruptive to the community. It's great if people bump into us, but we don't give them a lot of advance notice."

Mercer said his job is not complete until the film crews have packed and gone home. "I started here several weeks ago," he noted, "and I'll stick with it all the way. I'll be here to set up the logistics of the shooting, and I'll try to take care of all the little details."

Summer courses offered at the So . Shore Art Center

The summer session of courses at the South Shore Art Center will be in full swing the week of July 7.

New courses to be offered this summer are Judeth Van Hamm Wiers From Sketch to Exhibit, a course designed to deal with the creative process needed to transform reference material into art and Andrew Callahan The Art of Caricature designed to introduce students to the art of caricature. The first session of classes at the Center, 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset, runs the month of July and a second four-week session begins August 4. Advance registration is required for all classes and workshops on the summer schedule.

Wiers class will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays beginning July 8 from 7:30 p.m. to 10 p.m. She will work with her students on how to use sketches, photographs and slides in producing a finished piece of art. Students will learn how to recognize essential qualities of the material and how to deal with these in terms of size, color and design. The goal of the course will be for each participant to exhibit a finished work in August. Students should bring sketches to the first class.

Callahan's caricature class will meet Tuesdays and Thursdays beginning August 5 from 4 to 6 p.m. The introduction to the art of caricature will be achieved through the study of various artists and different styles of caricature. Callahan will instruct students in various techniques and methods used in caricature. This course is good for both adults and teenagers.

A face well recognized around the Center, that of David Tandy, will be back for the summer session to teach his popular courses, Introductory Painting and Introductory Drawing, both meeting on Mondays and Wednesday starting July 7, from 7:15 to 10:15 p.m. His courses are designed to give a good bases in both painting and drawing. In the painting course students will work with oils or acrylics and the emphasis will be on drawing, composition and image-making. Students will work directly from still life or model. Tandy will explore color, painting technique and form.

His drawing course is for the absolute beginner and anyone wishing a fundamental grounding in drawing skills, starting with mind-to-eye-to-hand coordination of motor skills and progressing to relationships of space, line and depth. He will explore with this class how and why to use line and mass in relation to a two-dimensional surface.

Albert Abany will teach Draw or Paint Landscape on Tuesdays and Thursdays beginning July 8 from 9:30 a.m. to noon. Students may opt to draw or paint outdoors at selected locations on the South Shore. Primary stress will focus on selecting, organizing and composing landscape elements to produce strong graphic statements in drawing and structural color organization in painting.

Virginia Avery will teach two sessions of her popular Outdoor Watercolor course, meeting on Wednesdays and Fridays beginning July 9 and again on August 6 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Her course is a series of lessons in watercolor helping the students to better develop needed painting skills. Individual attention will be geared to a student's abilities and desire to progress. A good course selection for all levels of artistic ability.

Paul Fortin will teach two photography courses, Beginning Photography on Mondays and Wednesdays beginning July 7 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. and Intermediate/Advanced Photography on Monday and Wednesdays beginning August 4 from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. The beginning course will cover all the basics including F stops,shutter speeds,films,filter, composition, lighting, subjects, etc. Emphasis in this course is on recognizing the elements of good photography and applying them to the student's work.

In the next level course, students will explore various subjects including portrait, people and landscape. Fortin will focus on aesthetics, composition and approach needed to create a good photograph. Students may use black and white or color.

Susan Rodgerson will teach a children's course Paint and Draw Outside on Tuesdays and Thursdays starting July 15 from 4 to 5:30 p.m. Students will learn about design, composition and color using craypas, tempera and watercolors. Young artists will learn basic drawing and painting skills and work on projects geared to their age level. The class is designed for ages seven to eleven.

These summer session courses are in addition to the one-week intensives taking place in June, July and August. Combine summer studies with sun, sand and surf by enrolling in one of the South Shore Art Center offerings.

Prospective students may meet instructors and enroll in classes during the Center's summer arts festival "Celebration!" on the Cohasset Common, July 27, 28, and 29.

For a complete summer schedule of classes, call the Center, 383-9548.

Artists asked to submit work

The South Shore Art Center's gallery selection committee invited professional artists, photographers and fine craftspeople to submit their work for consideration for membership in the Center.

Original work must be delivered to the Center, 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset, Friday, June 20 between noon and 4 p.m. The gallery selection jury will then make its selection for membership in the Center.

Five works of art must be submitted by those working in painting, drawing or pastel and 10 pieces in photography, sculpture and crafts. Slides are not acceptable for gallery selection.

Artists who are selected for gallery membership are eligible to exhibit one work each month in the Center and to have five small works in the bins. Artist members are also considered for monthly gallery exhibits in the invitational gallery.

Jurying this selection are Chris Rifkin who works with stained glass and printmaking; Becky Haletky, a freelance commercial artist who exhibits extensively in the area; and Virginia Allen, professor and program director of art history at the Massachusetts College of Art.

Sailing Club junior program

Response to the club's junior summer sailing program has been extremely good. It is suggested that parents stop by the club during the week of June 14 to check the posted class schedules.

Inter-town sports day

The Cohasset, Scituate, Norwell and Hingham Recreation Departments will conduct a sports/athletic day for boys and girls aged 11 to 14, Wednesday July 16, (rain date Wednesday, July 30), at the Central Junior High School Field in Hingham.

Buses will leave from the Cohasset Town Hall at 8:45 a.m. and return at about 1:15 p.m. that day. Pre-registration is required.

Sports events offered will be basketball, softball, soccer, and street hockey. Towns will play games in a round-robin type tournament. Each participant should sign-up for at least two activities. The cost for this program is $5.00 per person.

Bring a lunch; drinks will be provided. Participants may enter as many games as they wish, however, it is probable that two events will fill the day. Those who plan to play street hockey should bring their own stick (rubber blade-street hockey sticks).

To register, please call the Recreation office at 383-6791, before July 7. Also in order to depict town teams, Cohasset must wear T-shirts or sweat shirts.

Volleyball nets will be set up for those who may not be playing a specific game at a specific time.

'Cats'

When the Children's Ballet Workshop performed their version of "Cats" two years ago, it was so widely acclaimed they knew that they would have to do it again. They will, June 12, 13 and 14 at Hingham High School.

"Cats" will be the third short ballet on the program on those three evenings, combining with "Slavonic Dances" and Hans Christian Anderson's, "The Nightingale" to ensure another memorable showcase for the talents of the Workshop.

"Slavonic Dances" has been choreographed by Victor LaCasse of the Boston Ballet Company, to music by Antonin Dvorak, who based the melodies on the folk music of his native Czechoslovakia. LaCasse who has worked with the senior members of the Workshop, is enthusiastic about the results of the collaboration. "The dancers are so great, that it's hard to believe that they are children," he said. "And combining their talents with Dvorak's music results in something very special."

"The Nightingale" promises to be a spectacular ballet with Oriental characters and their parasols, robes and fans and other colorful attire. The nightingale herself is danced by Christine Ciccone, who has been magical in rehearsals.

"The performance will close with "Cats", which is appropriate since there is absolutely no way to follow it", Nan Keating said. "We've added some music and additional parts, and we think it's even more exciting than the first time.

Beth Vages who choreographed the original version of "Les Chats" (Cats) two years ago, has made some minor changes. "I've tried to relate the dancing to the strengths of the cast," she stated. "That way we capitalize on their individual talents.

Performances by the Children's Ballet Workshop begin at 7:30 p.m. June 12, June 13, and June 14 at Hingham High School. Tickets will be available at the door and by calling 749-3737.

Hallmark 100 sets sales record

Hallmark 100 Properties, Ltd., of Cohasset recorded a record sales volume in excess of $20 million for the first five months of 1986.

This figure is more than double the firm's sales volume for all of 1985. Hallmark 100 has doubled its sales force over the past six months and now has 10 full-time associates.

Chis Ford, the firm's owner, feels that Hallmark's success is due to their innovative format. At Hallmark 100, Sales Associates share directly in the company's overhead costs as well as their own advertising and business expenses and in return retain most of the income they generate.

"We have spread out the risk and increased the rewards," stated Ford, "and this is the way that the top professionals like to have it. We are all in business for ourselves but we share the excitement of working together and the net result is positive for us and positive for our clients. We are truly an 'All Pro' team and the public is beginning to recognize this fact."

School Committee considers land release for housing

By Matt Baron
Mariner Correspondent

The Cohasset school committee accepted the recommendation of the school facilities committee that it "consider the eventual release of approximately two acres of land" for middle-and low-income housing for eight mentally retarded adults.

The release, as stated in the facilities' committee report to the school committee, would be "subject to the performance of an engineering study and a determination, by the school committee, based on the results of the study, that a suitable site is available."

Marlette added the housing authority's first recommendation of a 24-acre release was "not advisable."

Article 22 of the June 23 town meeting warrant requests the town abandon a parcel of land off Route 3A for school purposes and transfer it to the Cohasset Housing Authority. The entire parcel, located behind the Deer Hill School, includes 24 acres.

Assist. Superintendent Steve Hart said the two-acre recommendation was "a much more reasonable approach. . . It seemed to be much better thought out."

While the Cohasset school system has 72 surplus acres, committee member Chris Ford cited a 1972 study which revealed only 20 acres were buildable.

Committee member Barbara Bliss added, "I'm concerned about freezing alternatives for the future. . . .I just want us to protect the school interests."

The committee expressed much concern over whether the state would pay for the engineering study, which would probably cost at least $4,000.

In other business, the committee also dealt with the school bus policy, citing two major problems.

Hart said there was a need to improve the "lack of communication between the bus driver and the school principal." He suggested forms be made available for drivers to communicate with the schools.

Hart added the institution of volunteer bus monitors, especially during the first week of the school year, would "relieve the driver of the disciplining of children."

Also, Superintendent Eugene Crowell and Hart said they would begin interviewing the final three candidates, as recommended by an internal screening committee, for the post of youth adjustment counselor.

The committee also accepted the resignation of Ruth Muir, a special needs teacher at the Joseph Osgood School.

Wishing Muir the best of luck, Vice Chairman Richard Conley said, "It's always sad when nice people move away from us."

At the selectmen's meeting Monday night, housing authority chairman Muncey explained that in order to obtain state-funded engineering, the town must first approve the land-taking.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle suggested the housing authority could still recommend that town meeting approve taking the entire 24 acre parcel. "Then you could transfer the land back if you don't need the entire 24 acres," he said.

The housing authority was scheduled to make a recommendation to selectmen prior to the start of Monday's town meeting.

Judy Gilman recovers slowly, surely from accident

By Charlene Vandini
Mariner Staff

Hingham Police Log, Wednesday, June 12, 1985, 6:30 p.m. "Accident, many phone calls re: same at Main and Westmoreland..."

Not a week goes by without someone asking about Judy Gilman. And, during the last few weeks, so many people have heaved a sigh, realizing that it's been one year since the accident that changed Judy's life.

No one knows what happened, and we'll probably never know. But on that rainy, overcast day last year, Hingham Mariner editor Judy Gilman's car collided with a maple tree, while she was on her way from the press in Duxbury to the Hingham office.

She was rushed to South Shore Hospital with severe injuries to her head, face, leg, and arm. She was unconscious for several weeks. She was hooked-up to more machinery than I'd ever seen in one place at one time.

But, what a change in a year!

Judy looks like a million bucks! Her head is a mass of red curls; as ever, her nails are manicured and polished. Her physical injuries are healed, with no visible traces. After several sessions with a dentist, her smile is lovely once again. She has a daily exercise regimen, which includes a leg work-out with a 15-lb weight. Suffice it to say, Judy Gilman runs up stairs!

Her vocabulary would make most people feel inadequate.

Last Saturday, Solace Tobey and I accompanied Judy on "The Shopping Spree to End All Shopping Sprees." Solace, a colleague of Judy's back to the now-defunct Hingham Mirror, has been a regular visitor for Judy, and has taken her on many outings over the last few months.

Judy wants everyone to know how grateful she is to all the people who contributed to the fund-raiser held for her benefit last October. She has come to fully appreciate the extent of the generosity of so many people, and mentioned it several times.

But, we explained, everyone knows if the shoe was on the other foot, Judy would do the same for anyone else.

Her sense of humor comes through in wonderful little sparks, as I recognized when we fell into the banter that characterized old conversations. While shopping, I said the only way I could enjoy myself more would be if we were shopping for me. Judy replied, "Well, next time, you can have an accident..."

She has every reason to be proud of her progress. She said during therapy sessions, she is often the only one in the group who knows the answer to questions. Now, the therapist asks, "Does anyone — other than Judy — know the answer?"

There is some lasting damage. No one knows if it can be overcome.

Judy admits her memory of the last 10 years is a bit cloudy. She receives cards and letters with names so familiar-sounding, but she can't place them or match the names with the appropriate faces. Just now, she's reading through the tons of cards and letters she received just after the accident. They mean so much to her, this outpouring of love, concern, and best-wishes.

The wall above her bed is a collage of all this correspondence, and she's very conscientious about replying to her mail.

Another problem is that due to her injuries, Judy doesn't have much of a sense of smell now. Passing the perfume counter in the store, she said she can smell some very strong scents, but can't identify them.

Her vision is not perfect. She's scheduled for eye surgery next month at Tufts-New England Medical, to re-position her right eye, according to her husband John. This will enlarge her field of vision. If it's successful, a second operation may be performed later. One lens of her glasses is intentionally fogged, to eliminate the double-vision she has experienced since the accident.

Judy walks slowly and feels more comfortable holding onto a companion's arm, but this is due in large part to her vision problems.

John said Judy has undergone two evaluations recently at The Greenery in Brighton, where she has been a patient since last August. Results of the evaluations won't be available until later this month.

"We're not sure what comes next," he said.

But, Judy has come far in a relatively short time. Last year at this time, I wouldn't have believed this was possible.

Cards and letters can be sent to:

A new Council challenge for Gerard Keating

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Gerard Keating, who retired many years ago as the town's postmaster and later as its veterans agent, is still going strong.

His days of volunteer service are far from over as he begins his first term on the town's Council on Aging.

"It's in my blood," the 66 year-old native said, explaining why he has served so many years on numerous boards and committees.

Keating worked as the town's veteran's agent during the Vietnam War. Despite the number of Cohasset residents who fought in that battle, Keating said few claims were filed with his office. "Things went like a roller coaster then," he recalled. "In the winter, I'd be pretty busy in those days. I helped veterans with their unemployment claims, getting them the help they needed. But Cohasset has never had a tremendous number of veterans apply for aid. We were one of the lowest on the South Shore, in contrast to Hull, Rockland and even Scituate."

When asked why he volunteered for the position where he served for 12 years, Keating answered, "I didn't volunteer - I was asked.

"The selectmen asked me to take the job and I told them to look for someone else," he continued. "They did, but then they asked me again so I took it. I was the postmaster the same time as I served as the veteran's agent."

In 1969, Keating's duties as Cohasset's veteran agent touched home. His son, Allen, was killed in Vietnam. The 21 year-old man was shot with rifle fire after dismounting from from an armored carrier.

"That really was during the height of Vietnam," Keating said.

His family now includes his wife, Margaret, a daughter who lives in Newport, R.I., two sons in Duxbury, one in Marshfield, and one in Connecticut. "My daughter is the oldest. Then we had six boys. I guess we lost the pattern," he joked.

While serving as the town's veteran's agent, Keating was also head of the local post office. He began his career in Cohasset and ended in the same town 42 years later. He was postmaster 35 years, retiring in 1962.

During his 42 years in the Postal Service, Keating said the office moved from Depot Court to South Main Street where the Cohasset Colonial Pharmacy is now located. It wasn't until 1963 that the workers and equipment moved to its current location on Ripley Road.

The fourth generation of his family to reside in Cohasset, Keating said his desire to serve the town has spanned many years and many committees.

He has served as chairman of the school committee and personnel committee. He was a member of the James Brook study committee, the Government Island study committee, and has long been involved with the community center and Cohasset Little League.

The Black Horse Lane resident noted his sisters still live in the family homestead on James Lane.

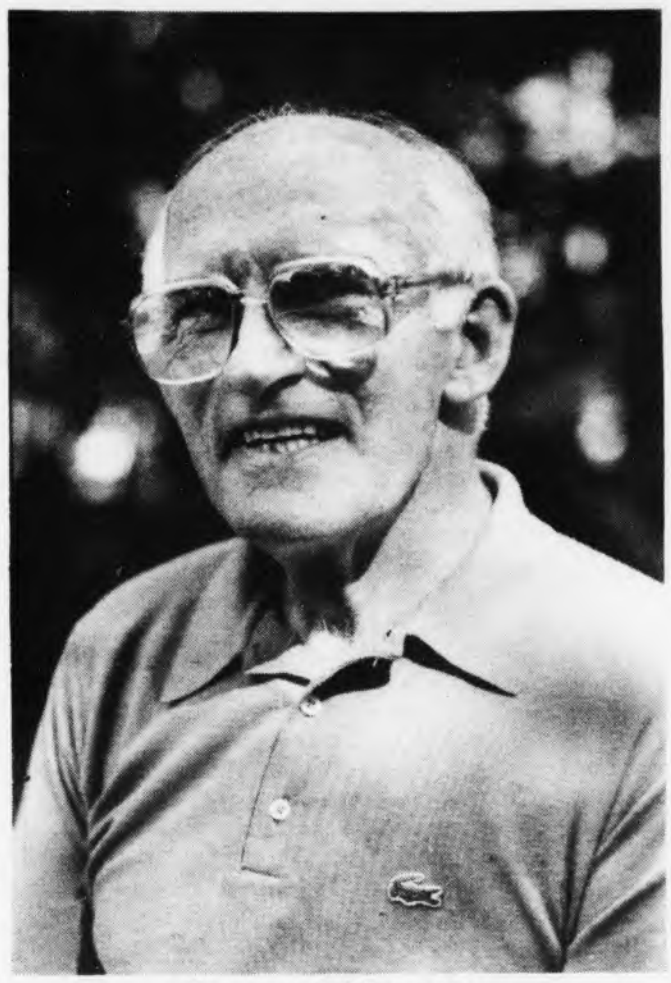
This year, after his resignation as the town's veterans agent in September, Keating was named to the Council On Aging. That followed his membership on the group which selected Kathy Bryanton to head Cohasset's senior center.

"That center is the best thing that's ever happened to Cohasset and its senior citizens," Keating stated with enthusiasm. "In 1969 Cohasset voted to establish a Council On Aging and this January we opened the senior center. Since it opened, this center has expanded and more people are aware of the programs we have for senior citizens. It's a great place."

Still in the 'thick' of town politics and active in local service, Keating said the sewer plan is the biggest issue facing Cohasset.

"It's time to move forward," he stated emphatically. "We've been dragging long enough. For good or for bad, there are no clear cut decisions being made. Every meeting leaves more doubt in the minds of many residents.

"I'm very worried the future of our sewerage plan will rest on the politicians' decisions of another town. That is a fragile situation at best. Our rates will be controlled by politicians of another town. Any emergency situation that might arise - preferential treatment will be given to Hull," he concluded.



Gerard Keating

Keating, who graduated along with 11 other boys and 12 girls, admitted the inevitability that Cohasset will change.

"We have to recognize the fact that all towns change," he said. "I'd be perfectly happy if Cohasset had remained the same as it was 30 or 40 years ago. It was a nice small town then. But it's a fact of life. The town is growing, and there are many new people here."

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Why Massachusetts Republicans declined, Part II:

Their mistakes

Last week I enumerated four factors which I believe helped lead to the Republican decline in Massachusetts: the Depression/New Deal, the charisma of John F. Kennedy, the radicalization of the young during the Viet Nam/Watergate period, and the rise of Michael Dukakis who deprived Republicans of the corruption issue.

None of these factors pertain to actions of the Republicans themselves in bringing about their decline. But they have acted, and have failed to act, in a number of ways that have hurt themselves. One failure, which is the fifth factor in their decline, is the failure of Yankee Republicanism.

From 1860 to Gov. Francis Sargent's defeat by Dukakis in 1974, Yankees led the Party or guided those who led it. They did a good job of it, too. In his heyday James Michael Curley tasted defeat at the hand of a former Newton alderman named Leverett Saltonstall. From 1860 to 1974 the Yankee-guided Republican Party was never out of power for long, not even during the Depression, not even with a Kennedy in the White House.

But the Yankee-guided Party was run like a club or a corporation — from the top down. Saltonstall was first elected an alderman because he impressed Party leaders who urged him to run and arranged his nomination. Edward Brooke (then a Negro) was nominated for attorney general in 1962 over the Yankee Elliot Richardson because the same Saltonstall wielded a quick gavel. He, and probably not a majority of the delegates, considered Brooke's nomination important.

This "top-down" style and mentality eventually did the Yankee Republicans in. In the 1960's Saltonstall and other leaders took great care in putting the state ticket together with excellent men such as Saltonstall himself, Brooke, Richardson, John Volpe, and Francis Sargent. In this they were successful, but at the same time they utterly neglected the legislature.

Not only did the state Party fail to support the Party's legislative candidates, Yankees as a lot and with a few exceptions such as John Sears got to be too good to serve in the legislature. The legislature was and is the political proving ground, and from John Adams to Christian Herter to Tim O'Neil to Mike Dukakis our statesmen along with a few or our scoundrels have emerged from it.

But with the Party no longer seeking and financing good legislative candidates, and with Yankees as a lot no longer willing to get their hands dirty, their feet wet, or their tax returns queried by running for the legislature, Republican numbers in the House and Senate declined biennially from 1958 when the Party lost its majorities to 1984 when it made tiny gains. Young Republicans in the legislature became as rare as the two flowered rush, and those that there were tended to be conservative non-Yankees such as Andrew Natsios.

The demise of the moderate Yankee in the party was made official by Ray Shamie's defeat of Elliot Richarson for the U.S. Senate nomination in 1984. Unfortunately for the Party, the war between liberal Yankees and conservative non-Yankees continues and continues to be extraordinarily bitter — as bitter in the hatreds it holds as anything I recall from the epic Democratic battles between Mike Dukakis and Ed King.

The Democrats in Massachusetts are big and bloated in their legislative numbers, and for now they can get away with their internal battles royal. The Republicans cannot. Their conservative ethnics and liberal Yankees need each other and need to stop fighting each other if the Republican Party is to start electing some candidates. The sixth factor, therefore, in their prolonged decline is their prolonged internal bickering.

The seventh factor might be called the "deserts of penury," and it is this factor that has led directly to the recent rashes of "buffoon for governor" syndrome. The problem is this: the 1986 Party is so small, so ineffectual, and so scorned in high places that it tends to attract folks from low places.

At their April convention I was surprised to encounter some virulent anti-busers from Boston who had more or less been run out of the Democratic Party in the 1970's, as well as a motorcycle gang attracted to Greg Hyatt in sympathy with this opposition to the seatbelt law.

A party as weak as the Republicans becomes desperate, and it is thus that a John Lakian or a Greg Hyatt can become a front runner for governor while still an unknown, or a Royal Switzler can be turned to by a convention while still an unknown. The "top-down" methods of the now discarded Yankee leadership can justly be faulted on several scores; but one may be certain that Chris Herter or Lev Saltonstall would have checked out the backgrounds of Mssrs. Lakian, Hyatt, and Switzler before letting them encounter the press.

A party as weak as the Republicans, one that is in essence nothing more than a structure, a few good legislators, and Andrew Card in Washington reporting to Ronald Reagan through Donald Regan, attracts unneeded predators. If one is an amoral lightweight or a creep with a curious cause, does one undertake to take over the enormous Dukakis machine over on Democrat Street? Or does one go after the fallow and neglected structure here on Republican Road? The intelligent lightweight or creep, I would argue, will follow the Republicans, and that is what I mean by the "deserts of penury;" and that is why you see motorcycle gangs and virulent antibusers, but mighty few statesmen, at the Republican convention.

(Second in a three-part series)

Fishermen's Festival goes Cajun

"Massachusetts seafoods go Cajun" at the Plymouth Fisherman's Festival Saturday, June 21 from 10 to 4 on Plymouth's historic waterfront.

State seafood specialists from the Division of Marine Fisheries will be demonstrating easy-to-preare Cajun and creole recipes using native seafoods. There will be free recipes and tastes for all who attend.

While chefs and gourmets have been quick to adapt to the Cajun craze most people are looking for quick and easy recipes to follow at home. At the Divison of Marine Fisheries' booth, state seafood specialists will be preparing easy Cajun recipes using local seafoods such as cusk, monkfish, and mackerel.

They'll demonstrate how cusk lends itself beautifully to pan-blackened recipes; the firm meat of monkfish contributes to a mean creole dish; and mackerel makes barbecuing with Cajun spices a cinch.

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

Waking up to nuclear power

It may not go down in history as the equal of "Dewey beats Truman," but the cover headline of the April 4 issue of "The Economist" is surely one of the most ill-timed.

Just weeks before the nuclear accident at Chernobyl, the cover story was "The Charm of Nuclear Power."

It said, "There is only one way to prove to the public that nuclear power is cheap, safe and environmentally benign. That is to get plenty of nuclear plants built, and then to accumulate, year after year, a record of no death, and no serious accidents."

Clearly, the task of selling nuclear power to the public has been made monumentally more difficult. Throughout Europe, nations have been reversing their policies toward nuclear power, on both sides of the Iron Curtain.

Local events have pointed toward New Englanders reassessing the nuclear power they have been sold.

"The Economist" also said, "The Russians, the Taiwanese and the Chinese, who do not have voters to worry about, have pressed ahead with their nuclear power programs."

Once again we see that having voters to worry about is the best defense against the abuses of power, whether it be political or nuclear, or both.

We are also discovering that a nuclear accident need not grab world headlines to be distructive to the local community.

As this column is being written, a study has been released showing an increase in the infant mortality rate in Plymouth and environs after a "small" radiation leak in 1982. Proponents of nuclear power naturaly dispute the study.

There are other examples. Remember Karen Silkwood? She diedmysteriously after revealing the murderously shoddy safety precautions at the uranium processing plant in Gore, Oklahoma.

Slikwood is gone but the plant remains, as reported in the March issue of "The Progressive." Recently it has purchased over a thousand acres of land near the plant, which it has been spraying with an experimental fertilizer containing uranium waste products.

While the public has been told it is harmless, a neighbor who breeds hunting dogs has had four litters of deformed pups since they started spraying.

Local fishermen tell tales of fish with cancers and other strange growths.

A common defense of nuclear power is "If you don't want nuclear energy, then try keeping your lights and television off tonight and see how you like it."

My answer is that it might take a while to adjust, but before you know it, I think we'd do just fine, maybe better.

Emerson and Thoreau managed to live civilized lives in New England without electricity.

More realistically, we have to ask ourselves if the price of nuclear energy is worth the benefits.

And by price I don't mean merely the dollars and cents, but the future damage that might be done, which nuclear experts obviously are very poor at calculating.

I would much rather forsake a significant percentage of my present power needs than risk dying of radiation-induced illness twenty years from now.

Of even more significance is the risk we are taking for future generations. We have no right, regardless of whether our faith rests with God, science or progress, to risk the health of our grandchildren or the earth on which they must live, for the sake of air conditioning, video cassette recorders and iluminated billboards pitching vodka on the Southeast Expressway.

The accident in the Soviet Union may yet prove that the innocent people who died there will not be merely additional martyrs to technology, but examples which showed the world that nuclear energy is a Frankenstein's monster, created by human meddling in the processes of nature over which we have no dominin.

The Romans, whose greatest technical accomplishment was their water system, lined their aquaducts with lead.

People thought the Black Plague was carried by cats, so they killed cats by the thousands. Actually it was carried by rats and people were killing themselves by destroying the rats' enemies.

I used to think that history would remember us (if there is anybody around to remember) as the civilization that was destroyed by self-inflicted radiation.

But recent events may yet proye me wrong. If people around here get some civic outrage going, and demand reasonable answers to the hard questions of nuclear power, we may help develop a mass movement that will lead to sane energy development worldwide.

Then history will remember us as the people who let the future live.

(Darrell Berger is minister of the First Parish Unitarian Church in Scituate)

From the garden

by Joan Pinkham

Our reward for January is here with the warm sun

June is the reason why New Englanders endure November's gloom, January's sleet and April's cruel east wind blowing in off the ocean.

Our reward is everywhere; in the lush apple trees covered with flowers, warblers making the woods ring at dawn and egrets stalking the salt marshes. There will be a full Strawberry Moon to celebrate the summer solstice June 21, the longest day of the year.

It's also nesting time in New England and the shore birds are back to spend the summer. Birds show less interest in our feeders—natural food is now abundant—but it's nice to have them in the garden, for they love to feast on insects. People with cats can have gardens with birds—try belling your cat. Feeder, birdhouse or bath can't be near a tree or bush where cats may lurk.

Place feeders on top of poles or metal pipes; add a funnel to the pole to keep the cats from climbing up it. And, should you find an injured bird, there is a vet in attendance at the N.E. Wildlife Medical Center at the junction of Rte. 228 and 3A in Hingham—all they ask in return is a donation.

The longest day in the year is on the 21st—15 hours and 37 minutes; far, far better than December's eight hour and 47 minutes when dusk falls all too soon. Just think, we have the charcoal manufacturers to thank for three additional weeks of daylight saving time beginning next April. Three years ago, they began lobbying for DST to stretch the outdoor barbecue season.

Thanks to our local garden club members, our village greens and civic buildings take on a festive summer air with plantings and window boxes. A community effort is under way in Norwell where the Norwell Garden Club, North River Gardeners, Chamber of Commerce and their new tree warden, Paul McWilliams, are planning the landscaping of their new town offices. A booth at the Town Fair on June 28 is for the purpose of attracting donations toward purchase of plants, bushes and trees—a lovely way to contribute a memorial to a loved one.

Whether you are vacationing on the South Shore, or a "native," you don't want to have your children tiptoeing around as through wild bears were about to pounce.

For this reason, they should be made aware of the many poisonous plants to be avoided. The nine plants that most frequently get them into trouble are: philodendron, yew, holly berries, dieffenbachia, woody nightshade, black elder, pokeweed, pyracantha and Jerusalem cherry. A "poison" plant doesn't necessarily kill. Poison ivy is a good example. Also, even though daffodils look good enough to eat, any child who eats any part of one may become subject to vomiting and diarrhea. Some poisonous plants are surprising.

Unripe potatoes which have turned green, or the sprouts of potatoes may cause headache, colic and vomiting. Another edible plant with parts which are dangerous is rhubarb. The green expanded leaf of rhubarb contains the chemical calcium oxalate which can cause stomach pain, weakness and if eaten in large amounts, coma and death.

With every crash of a fallen oak and roar of a bulldozer, wildflowers surrender their fields and woodlands to yet another house, shopping mall or condo. Fields of daisies are seldom seen and open woods and bogs no longer offer clumps of lady slippers, members of the orchid family. Careless picking has done away with our state flower, trailing arbutus, better known as Mayflowers.

Where will we find violets or open fields of clover and what child of today, spends the time searching for a four-leaf clover? Even the pesty dandelion will be missed, for they provide seed for the birds. How long since you've seen a buttercup, or scarlet and yellow columbines, among the most graceful of wild flowers? Perhaps when we hear the forbidding sound of yet another foundation going in, we should sally forth with shovel and basket to dig up some of these vanishing wildflowers to prevent yet another way of life from succumbing to what is called progress.

We were wondering aloud the other night as to whether families ever go out for Sunday afternoon drives any more. The Mass. Horitcultural Society has listed gardens one can visit during vacation months. It is suggested that one telephone ahead for information as to hours, etc. before a visit to such delights as the Boston Public Garden, Fenway Rose Garden, Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum; all of Boston. The Mt. Auburn Cemetery in Cambridge has a rare and extensive collection of trees and shrubs from all parts of the world. Quincy has the formal period gardens of the Adams National Historic site; Westfield's Stanley Park has two thousand roses, carillon bells and arboretum. There are many spots to visit on the Cape, the nearest is in Sandwich where the Heritage Plantation offers 35 acres of plantings and museums.

The Organic Garden Group in Marshfield marveled at the magnificent rhododendrons and azaleas on a recent day trip planned by Frank and Marie Moss. Members also flocked to see the handsome sun dial built by their son. Soon the day lillies will be in bloom at Heritage, flowers the Chinese have been cultivating for their beauty, medicinal qualities and as an edible plant for centuries.

Today over 12,000 varieties are being grown, for these flowers grow almost anywhere under most soil and climatic conditions and garden enthusiasts find them a satisfying hobby, even though each bloom only lasts a day.

Gardening by the sea is a great challenge, for you're battling the wind, sandy soil and salt air all the time. The selection of plants is of the utmost importance and ones that do well along the shore include: bayberry, the rugosa rose, artemisia, a hardy perennial that tolerates the full sun and sedums that grow well in sandy soil. Lilacs also flourish along the seaside, as do beach plum, blueberry and heather. Never select plants that need a lot of fertilizer, such as carnations and garden phlox.

ANGLER'S CORNER

by Bill Smith

On the merits of surf fishing

Surf fishing is an exciting, and at times, a very effective way of catching fish.

The surf fisherman, being shore bound, is often at the mercy of the environmental elements and migrational patterns of the fish he seeks.

Thus, in this authors opinion, fishermen who successfully catch fish from the beach must be counted among the best of all anglers.

Striped Bass and Bluefish are the predominate game fish sought by the surf fisherman. Bottom feeders such as Cod, Flounder, and Tautog are also regular targets.

This article will not concentrate on fishing techniques which will be topics of future articles. Instead, it will relate the experience of a group of dedicated anglers during a recent fishing trip.

On Friday, May 30th, a group of fishermen from Adams Tackle and their families loaded up their truck campers with high expectations of catching Striped Bass as these fish began to move into Cape waters.

The fishing crew included the author, Bill Bois — a salty angler who has many years of experiencing plugging the Cape for Bass, and the author's two chidren.

Although young, Joey and Bryan Smith have been fishing since they were old enough to hold a rod.

As a matter of fact, Bryan won the Greater Plymouth Bass and Bluefish tournament with a very respectable Striped Bass at the age of seven. Also accompanying this crew was Ron Sullivan, new to surf fishing but an experienced boatsman.

The trip began almost a month before with preparations being made to tackle and equipment. Reels were cleaned and new line was spooled. Since fishing techniques would include bait fishing and plug fishing, an arsenal of different rods, reels, terminal tackle, and plugs had to be assembled. The crew was prepared for almost any situation.

The target would be Nauset Beach in Chatham and Orleans. This beach is famous for great Striped Bass fishing in the fall and has respectable fishing in the late spring. Two full sized four-wheel drive trucks with slide on campers would be established as a base for the crew, providing sleeping and cooking facilities as well as storage for all tackle.

At 4:30 p.m. Friday, the two truck campers departed Pembroke and headed south arriving in time to be inspected by the Nauset Beach control officers. All safety equipment was in order and a self-contained permit was issued to each camper. No surf-fisherman traveling the beaches of the Cape should ever venture out without a tow chain or rope, low pressure gauge, jack board, shovel, spare tire, and a jack. Adam's trucks are also equiped with fire extinguishers and compressors.

Before heading down to the inlet, air had to be released to flatten out the oversized tires so that more tread would spread out along the sand. The two truck campers began to run the nine miles to the intended fishing hole. The ride was extremely bumpy but also beautiful. As on any oversand trip, things did not go as planned.

A spare tire mount on one of the trucks broke, and the tire had to be retrieved. The planned route was altered due to high winds which kept the tide in and made the route impassible. Finally, the campers arrived at their designation and prepared to fish.

Sand spikes were driven into the ground to secure the bait rods. Working as a team, the crew baited the rods and cast them into the surf. Lights were attached to the tip of the rods so that the rods could be watched for the tell-tale sign of a fish. Next, the anglers geared up for the changing weather conditions. Heavier clothing and foul-weather gear were readied.

While two fishermen watched over the bait rods, the others cast swimming plugs in the surf. Finally, one of the rods bent over sharply. The rod was picked out of the sand spike, and the hook was driven home with a quick stroke of the big rod. This time the fish appeared to have a lot of weight but did not fight or make any substantial run. As the fish was landed, the reason was apparent; for this fish was not a Sriped Bass but a large Skate. As the tide resided, rods were packed away and the anglers climbed into their campers for a much needed sleep.

Saturday began with brilliant sunshine and comfortable temperatures. After a very hearty breakfast, the crew began to search for bait. Seaworms were dug from the high banks of the tidal pools, and sand eels were raked. Once bait was stored in the coolers, it was time to explore the beach and inspect tackle for the night. The two younger anglers, their dog, and their mother collected a number of specimens from the tidal pools. There was a backbone of a fish, a number of shells, beach glass, an old bottle and some live crabs. After writing a note and putting it inside, the old bottle was released into the ocean by the youngsters who were already awaiting an answer from some far-away native.

Later, as the sun was setting, rods were cast again to await the appearance of a Bass. Action was better this night than the previous, but no large Bass were caught on plugs or bait. Just before midnight one of the bait rods was almost pulled out of the sandspike before the anglers could reach it. Fighting the big fish was tiring, but the fatigued angler was excited with the anticipation of the year's first large Striped Bass. Suddenly, there was slack line! The big fish had broken off, and all that was left was just another fish story! Disappointed, the anglers prepared for bed. But nature had something in store.

A tremendous thunderstorm approached. Winds picked up rapidly until they were gale force, shaking the truck campers and awakening most of their residents. The winds subsided as quickly as they began and were followed by the most brilliant display of lightening ever witnessed by the fishermen.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By Claire McDonough

Introducing the new man of ... yuppie

"This," the Dragon roared, "is too much. Is nothing sacred?"

I looked at him. "What happened? Did I wash your underwear in the same load as a red shirt again? Did the Celtics fire K.C.? Did the Herald pirate some more comic strips from the Globe?"

He glared at me. "Worse. D.C. Comics is changing Superman."

"How?" Breida asked. "Are they giving him new super powers?"

"That could be neat," Skip interjected. "They could make him psychic. He could look through your closet door with his x-ray vision and tell you what you're going to wear tomorrow. He could buy a newspaper on Monday, hold it to his forehead, know what bank is going to be robbed on Wednesday, and be there waiting when the bad guys show up."

"Not too shabby an idea," Breida admitted. "He'd always know what Lois wants for Christmas, and where the crooks are hiding, and which mouth wash really freshens breath.

"Maybe he'd even know what happens to the socks in the washing machine."

"He could do very well in the stock market, too" I mused. "And Clark Kent could probably make big bucks writing about what really happened to Jimmy Hoffa."

"None of you understand," the Dragon fumed. "They're not giving him more powers — they're sapping the ones he has. They're turning him into a yuppie!"

He struck his forehead with the heel of his hand. "Can you believe it? They're going to make him vulnerable for heaven's sake. Who ever heard of a vulnerable Superman? It's a contradiction in terms."

Breida looked shocked. "How can they do this? They're tampering with some of my most cherished childhood memories. In a changing world when so few things were certain, one could always depend on Clark Kent to be a wimp, Lois Lane to be in peril, and Superman to save the universe. And we always know where Jimmy was coming from, and that the editor would yell."

"Yeah," Skip said glumly. "First they change the formula for Coke. Then they change the ingredients in Spam. Although I'd rather die than eat any kind of Spam, anyway. Now they want to change Superman. Dad's right, Nothing is sacred."

"It gets even worse," the Dragon told him. "Lois Lane is going to be a feminist."

"What's wrong with that?" I asked him. "You told me you were a feminist, too."

"That," Breida informed me, "was when he was sweetening you up. He wanted you to let him smoke in your car."

The Dragon fixed her with a basilisk stare.

"Look," he told me, "feminism is a movement whose time is here. I might even say its time is N.O.W. Just about everybody in the world agrees that women are as valuable in the marketplace as men are. And that they should receive appropriate remuneration for the work they do.

This has nothing to do with Superman Comics. The real Superman is a fantasy hero. Superman is invulnerable. Lois Lane and every other woman look up to him because he can do anything. Men look up to him, too, because he's everything they want to be. None of us really ever expect to be Superman, but we hold him in our hearts as an ideal. He has super power. He is pure of heart. He fights for truth, justice and the American Way of Life.

"This new Superman will probably let Lois Lane enroll him in her sensitivity group. And Clark Kent will let her talk him into taking assertiveness training. When they hold staff meetings at the Daily Planet they'll sip chablis and nibble brie. Jimmy will spread designer peanut butter on his croissants."

"Well," I told him, "I can understand why you'd be upset. But it isn't anything you can control, so you might just as well accept and forget it."

The Dragon glowered darkly. "Not unless," he muttered, "I can find enough kryptonite."

MUSINGS

☐ No matter how often you've read some of Senator Parker's anecdotes, some are worth repeating:

"Don't forget, ladies and gentlemen, the name is Ruso, spelled R-U-S-O. R as in righteousness, U as in unity, S as in service, and O as in honesty."

"When somebody you went to college with gets elected to Congress, you're amazed all over again at America's ability to survive."

☐ From his law office window in Plymouth, Atty. Bob Forrest can see his parked car. But he wasn't looking the day someone stole it.

☐ In this world there are savages who need upward mobility to reach the plateau of ignorance.

☐ An aphorism is considered a half truth. Why do most people believe the wrong half?

Toute la ville prepare pour les amis français

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

The mayor of Cohasset's sister city arrived in town Wednesday to begin a two-week stay filled with activities to acquaint him with this town.

The mayor of Souppes-sur-Loing, France and the chairman of the town's cultural exchange committee are visiting for the next two weeks to officially establish kinship and open communications between the towns.

Cohasset selectmen proclaimed Souppes-sur-Loing Cohasset's sister city in 1984. In World War II, Cohasset resident Thomas Churchill led the U.S. Army's Eighth Tank Battalion in liberating the French city from German occupation.

Mayor Victor Prudhomme and Monsieur Renee Dine and their wives will be hosted by local families and will participate in a number of activities to meet the people of Cohasset.

The French visitors will also enjoy a four-day excursion to New York City before the Fourth of July celebration.

"We tried to keep the first week of their stay very low-key and very Cohasset," said Marylou Lawrence, publicist for the cultural exchange committee. "We want to show them the town and let them meet people.

"After they return from New York, they'll have more opportunities to explore and do things like visiting Boston."

The cultural exchange committee was formed by selectmen in January to plan for Mayor Prudhomme's visit. The nine-member committee has planned a number of activities for the French visitors.

Friday, June 27 the Prudhommes and the Dines will visit Plimoth Plantation. In the evening there is a dinner with local residents at Kimball's-By-The-Sea.

Saturday, everyone in town is invited to a come-as-you-are reception at the Lothrop House to meet the French visitors. Robin and Marylou Lawrence will host a dinner for the visitors afterwards.

Owner Erwin Cone departs

End of an era at Red Lion Inn

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

For more than 200 years, the Red Lion Inn has been an integral part of Cohasset and its history. Its owner Erwin Cone, has left no less an important impression upon this community.

After 40 years of an association with Cohasset, the Red Lion, and many of the residents of this town, Cone will be leaving. As he travels to his new home in New Hampshire, he will carry with him memories of the people he has employed and the customers he has befriended.

The Red Lion is not simply a restaurant or an inn. It is a cozy corner table, a great steak, an extra dry martini, conversation with a local politician, a shy glance at a visiting Music Circus star, and the presence of Erwin Cone.

Whether peeking out from the kitchen where he might be filling in for an absent chef, or sitting with a friend in the back room or the bar, Cone and the Red Lion have become inseparable.

When diagnosed as having cancer six months ago, an ailing Cone had an opportunity to reflect. "There I was, laying there in the hospital. I had a lot of time to think," he recalled. "It was time to take life easy. I really don't feel as capable as I once was."

Cone explained it was not uncommon for the owner to work back-to-back 24 hour days. "If someone was sick, and someone else was on vacation, I had to fill three pair of shoes," he stated. " Even the finest person coming off the street can't handle your restaurant for you. You know where things are, and how things operate."

It has been a major decision - leaving the Red Lion and Cohasset. Cone decided to sell the restaurant and inn rather than dividing the property among his seven children. "That can cause an uproar in the family, and I didn't want that," he said. "After I go they can divide up the money fair and square."

Cone has no intentions of 'go'ing soon. His physicians have declared his cancer in remission. He is beginning to put back some of the 35 pounds he lost from his 175 pound frame during his medical treatments.

"I feel good today," he said. "All my life I've worked 14 hour days. Now I work six hours and I'm pooped. When I was real young, I could work 18 hours and party all night. But this disease and its treatment has taken a lot out of me."

The new owners of the red clapboard building on South Main Street include Philip Smith, Kurt Smalzell, and Francis Coffey.

Cone came to Cohasset in 1945 with his parents, Murray and Grace Cone. Experienced restaurateurs and hotel managers, the Cones had managed the Hatherly Inn in Scituate for a year prior to Calling all 'real people'— This is it

This could be it! This may be your big chance to break into show business!

The Casting Company of Boston will hold an open audition Sunday, June 29 at the Deer Hill School in Cohasset. About 1,500 persons will be cast as "extras or background people" for the upcoming production of "Witches of Eastwick."

According to Carol Larkin, assistant casting director for the company, this will be the only casting call for the entire film which will be shot next month in Cohasset, Hingham, Scituate and in Boston and North Shore communities.

The auditions will begin at 9 a.m. and conclude about 1 p.m.

These will not be speaking parts, she emphasized. Extras are the people in the movies who do not have any lines to remember or perform. They play the background scenes in a movie, such as a police officer, patients in a hospital, shoppers in a store, or passersby on the street.

The casting directors will be looking for "real people." In other words, someone could be rejected for being too beautiful, rather than for being too ugly, she said.

The public is welcome to attend the open call. One need not have any acting ability, Larkin emphasized. Each person must bring along a photograph. Once at the school, the person will complete a specification sheet detailing all his personal information such as height, weight, address and birthdate.

The actual audition will be quite simple, Larkin explained. The directors will meet for about a

A celebrated arts schedule this weekend

There's going to be a celebration in Cohasset this weekend.

Just as the beginning of summer is a guarantee, so is the arrival each June of the South Shore Art Center's art festival.

Entitled, "Celebration," the three-day event will feature art exhibits, children's activities, artist demonstrations, dance performances and a craft exhibit. The activities begin with a champagne preview to be held at The Oaks, Friday, June 27 between 6 and 8 p.m. Transportation from downtown Cohasset to the corporate offices of Yankee Oil will start at Cohasset Common at 5:30 p.m.

Among the other scheduled activities include drop-in workshops for young artists. The one-hour workshops will give young artists the opportunity to try their hands at a specific art technique.

At noon Saturday, June 28 Gil Coyle will teach the first workshop at the Town Hall. And at 4 p.m., Serena Brundige will lead a puppet-making workshop. Sunday, at 3 p.m., Susan Rodgerson will teach a third drop-in class. All three instructors are part of the Center's young artists staff and have been involved with the school year vacation drop-ins now being held in Cohasset, Hingham and in

Red tide alert still on

The taking of shellfish from the waters and flats of Cohasset has been prohibited by the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) until further notice.

DEQE has prohibited the taking of shellfish from waters and flats from the Cohasset-Hull town line of Manomet Point in Plymouth. The ban includes the towns of Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield, Duxbury and Plymouth.

DEQE has determined that certain shellfish contain high levels of Paralytic Shellfish Poison (P.S.P.) and has declared all species of shellfish unfit for food purposes until further notice.

Beach time extended

The attorney general has approved article 34 of the April town meeting in which voters extended the hours at the Sandy Beach parking lot.

At the request of Maxwell Pounder, town meeting voted to amend the town's bylaw to state that no person shall a park a vehicle in the Sandy Beach parking lot between the hours of 11 p.m. and 5 a.m. The lot had previously been closed at 10 p.m.

The amendment was offered during discussion of an original amendment to the bylaw sponsored by Richard Barrow of the recreation commission. That amendment stated the commission will make recommendations regarding the facility permit rules to the board of selectmen.

While discussing that amendment, Pounder suggested the Sandy Beach parking lot remain open an hour longer for the teens who gather there at night. Saying there were few alternative areas for the kids, Pounder suggested the Sandy Beach lot offered proximity and convenience to the teens.

The amendment to the main motion of article 34 was approved by a voice vote at the April town meeting.

Accountant honored

The Massachusetts Municipal Auditors and Accountants Association awarded Cohasset town accountant JoAnn Whittemore the designation of Certified Governmental Accountant.

The award was given at the association's annual meeting earlier this month.

The association awards the certification to those municipal finance officers who have met the professional level of standards required for certification.

Sewer line locations

Sewer commission chairman Charles DeSantis notifed the MBTA's Old Colony Railroad Rehabilitation project manager about the proposed route of the Cohasset sewer main.

The forced main, he said, will follow approximately 10,000 feet of the former Old Colony railroad bed. Specifications and estimated analysis has been completed by Ward Engineering Associates, assuming no rail and using the former right of way, he added.

The commission anticipates the start of the forced main construction in the fall of 1987. "At this time we are assuming no railroad," he wrote. "However, if one does materialize, we could foresee the MBTA participating in the forced main project by either funding the cost for the reinforced and re-engineered force main, or perhgaps paying for the cost differential resulting in re-siting the force main under streets adjacent to the railroad right-of-way."

TV crews film Cohasset declaration

Warner Brothers isn't the only film crew interested in Cohasset. Last week, Channel 7 filmed a commercial inside the John Wilson House on Elm Street

With permission from the Cohasset Historical Society, the film crew spent about eight hours inside the museum. The results of their efforts will be seen beginning July 4 in two thirty-second and one sixty-second commercial commemorating the bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution.

Producer Sherry Hodge explained the commercial is one of many promotional efforts being conducted by WNEV-TV to celebrate the 200th anniversary of the writing of the Constitution. Among the other planned events will be an Esplanade concert July 5 with the Boston Pops Orchestra, several hour-long programs throughout the year, many aimed at teaching children the significance of the Constitution.

The Cohasset commercial features a man (supposedly the author of the Constitution) writing the document in longhand. Sitting at a small corner store desk (which Society Curator David Wadsworth explained is usually located behind the front door) the viewer will only be able to see the hand and arm of the writer, the parchment document and his original quill pen.

Hodge said the crews have worked for months gathering the authentic accessories for the commercial. Quill pens, a pen knife, an ink well, the proper costume, yellowed parchment papers and the best location were sought for this commercial which will be used by the station for about a year and a half. The producer scoured several communities looking for a place to film the commercial. Cohasset was the perfect location, Hodge said, because of the authenticity of its building and furniture, and because it was accessible and available.

As film crews worked to make the commercial even more authentic-looking, fog machines were used to filter the camera lens. A peek through the camera showed a faded looking, antique-style desk with a busy hand working carefully upon the stiff parchment.

The man used in the commercial, Hodge explained, is not an actor but a caligrapher. His voice will not be heard, she noted, it's just his arm and hand that were needed for the filming.

The commercial will take seven hours to develop the audio portion, eight hours to shoot the commercial, and about 13 hours to edit the film. "That doesn't include all the time it took me to scout a location and find the props," she said.

Bylaw changes leave employees smiling

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Will they be living lifestyles of the rich and famous? No, but town employees are breathing easier since the voters of Cohasset upgraded the personnel bylaws Monday.

The bylaw changes were recommended by personnel consultant Caleb Marsh, were approved by the Personnel Committee, and were accepted by the voters.

New employees will go through a six-month probationary period, something Cohasset has never had.

Another major change in the bylaw regards personal leave. Employees will now be entitled to one day per year, which will not be deducted from sick leave, as it had been under the original bylaw.

"If an employee has six months of perfect attendance," said Janet Daggett of the Personnel Committee, they get an additional bonus day, so employees could in fact have three personal days per year not deducted from sick leave."

The next major change concerned sick leave.

Voters agreed to give town employees three days of sick leave, which could be used by an employee not just for his/her own recovery, but to stay home and care for a spouse or sick child.

Vacation policy was straightened out for bookkeeping purposes.

Pregnant employees can now take maternity leave; there was no provision for this occurrence under the old bylaw.

Longevity pay has been raised and promotions will guarantee an employee at least a three percent raise.

Article 2 gave everybody a pay raise for fiscal 1987.

The total cost to the taxpayers of Cohasset will be about $29,000.

The voters accepted Articles 1 and 2 with nary a kick nor scream, but when it came to hiring new help the boards got a bellyfull.

"I'm surprised at the Advisory Board's recommendation," John Seavey of 339 Beechwood Street said, "because for many years, to my understanding, they've been trying to hold down the number of employees in Town.

"I look at Articles 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8, and I count a real large number of new positions. Now, I don't doubt there may be the need, or perceived need for some additional help here, but I wonder... Are we going overboard this year?"

New positions include: A clerk/typist for the Town Clerk's office; secretaries for the Fire Dept. and Police Dept.; a Council on Aging Director; six summer patrolmen for the Police Dept. and a clerk for the Board of Assessors.

Finally, voters accepted a collective bargaining agreement made between the Town of Cohasset and the Cohasset Police Association.

The contract will run until June 30, 1988.

It will require $45,700 to implement. Over the four-year period covered by the contract (partially retroactive), each officer will have received by January 1988, a 26 percent raise plus $1,000.

Meanwhile, the Town will hire a civilian dispatcher starting July 1, 1986.

Sewer study proposal flushed down the tubes

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

A $20,000 sewer study proposal went down the tubes Monday in a close vote, 137-114.

Proponents of Article 15 fought tooth and nail, even voting against adjournment at 11:50 p.m. and asking for reconsideration.

Supporters of the measure were asking the Town to reanalyze the costs of various options for providing expanded sewer service, including the "Ward Plan" and the Metcalf and Eddy plan.

They also sought a ban on the use of two inch pipes and other "technical features not approved by the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering."

The proposal was backed by 210 petition signers "concerned with the present direction" the sewer plans were flowing.

Mary Jane McArthur, chairperson of the Citizen's Petition (as well as the Board of Selectmen) expressed concern about the sewer commission's favor of the Ward Plan.

"After four years of study," she lamented, "the plan should have been based not on cost, but on need.

"Some areas have been left out," she said, "You should consider not only cost factors, but quality of life."

The Advisory Committee recommended against the proposal.

Committee member Arne Gjesteby said, voters overwhelmingly dropped the Metcalf and Eddy Plan in favor of the Ward Plan at a Special Town Meeting in June, 1984.

He argued, two-inch pipes are "approvable" by the DEQE and the Hull connection was endorsed by that state agency.

"We don't need another study," he said.

Sewer Commissioner Charles DeSantis explained, a decrease in state and federal funding brought about changes in the original plan.

Sewer expansion under the Ward Plan he said, will be implemented in two five year stages.

DeSantis explained, the first point of the plan consists of a connection to the Hull treatment plant, if its Town Meeting agrees to accept Cohasset's waste.

The second point of the plan, he added, consists of installing sewer lines covering the most populated portions of the town.

DeSantis said the third point of the plan involves an on-site repair program of septic systems at the rate of 30 per year, with taxpayers footing about 35 percent of the bill.

The sewer commissioner defended his cost-consciousness.

He explained, the connection to Hull would cost $2.2 million, while building a sewer treatment plant in Cohasset would run about $9.2 million.

DeSantis compared the costs of the two plans.

The Ward Plan, phases one and two he said, would cover 519 dwelling units for $5,265,000. That figures to about $10,000 per unit.

He added, the Metcalf and Eddy Plan phase one would have covered 555 dwelling units for $16,128,000, or $29,000 per unit.

"I find the possibility of Hull not accepting us very remote," he told the voters.

William Montuori, chairman of the Board of Water Commissioners argued, the Ward Plan will not serve Route 3A, Brewster Road or Ledgewood.

"The program was cut back to meet costs."

Montuori said ground rules for the on-site program also ought to be laid prior to the plan's passage.

He added, "Hull won't allow Cohasset in until all of Hull is sewered, and that won't be for five, six or seven years if ever.

Sewer Commissioner Edward Guild rebutted, "I've had no intimation that Hull is anything but interested. The state supports this part of the plan and EPA is also in favor of the Hull connection."

In a narrow decision, Cohasset's voters decided they had studied the sewer situation enough.

Finally, they voted to adjourn 102-86.

Boards ponder development drainage

Members of the Scituate and Cohasset planning board, the conservation commission and the health board met last week to discuss how drainage from the proposed Indian Wind subdivision in the West End section of Scituate, would affect downstream properties.

The Scituate planning board granted the developer until Aug. 1 to submit revised subdivision plans indicating a retaining structure for drainage. The planning board will hold a site plan hearing on Sept. 2 and will decide by Sept. 10 whether to approve or disapprove the modified plans.

The engineer for the developer, Ken Teebagy, showed the representatives of the towns preliminary sketches of the subdivision.

Vincent Kalishes, conservation agent for the town of Scituate, told Teebagy there were additional wetlands areas that were not shown on the drawing.

"The point is that the lines don't look right to myself and a couple of others. It would make a difference on roadway design," he said.

Teebagy said, "My feeling is that it won't impact the road design at all. There is some disagreement about the wetland area. We will resolve that," he said.

Teebagy said the entire site drains into wetlands. He proposes to install pipes in a three to four-foot-high embankment across the wetlands to slow down the rate of drainage discharge.

John Madzelewski, engineer for the Cohasset planning board and conservation commission, said, "It seems like the total volume may increase by 20 percent or so. I think there is some sign that can be handled through the retaining structures Mr. Teebagy is describing."

Madzelewski said that drainage calculations to date "didn't address downstream concerns." The drawing "seems to indicate a flow pattern for drainage that is not necessarily the flow path in the field," he said.

Joseph Godzik, health agent for Cohasset, said he was concerned about the effect of the proposed subdivision on Cohasset's water supply. He said organic materials such as oils and contaminants from the septic system might migrate into nearby Aaron River Reservoir and Lily Pond, which feed the town's water supply.

Godzik asked the Scituate planning board in a recent letter to require the developer to install the leaching facility of the septic system 200 feet from surface water supplies rather than 100 feet as the town requires.

Charles Sparrell of the planning board said it would be impossible to change the town regulations for one development.

REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES

By Norma Telesco
Home Center Realty

CONDOMINIUM FEES

Smart condominium buyers question the monthly fees for maintaining the project's common elements. In examining these charges, it's important to consider what is included.

In projects that offer many services and recreational facilities, fees may be higher. Doormen, telephone answering services, tennis courts, swimming pools and landscaping all increase the costs of running the condominium. Buildings with elevators are more costly than garden apartments or townhouses. If units are metered separately for heating, air conditioning, gas and electricity, the fees will be less than in projects where utilities are included in the fee. Finally, most condominium associations are far more conservative than individual homeowners in budgeting for major improvements on repairs, and they're likely to include a healthy reserve fund in the condo's budget.

If you are considering a condo purchase, ask your Realtor if you can examine the association's most recent budget. This will tell you what's included in your fee, and you can make sure that reserve funds will cover any planned improvements.

Addition cost sends plan back to the drawing board

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The proposal for a $940,000 addition to Cohasset Town Hall failed to survive vigorous debate Monday, as voters rejected the plan, 161-118.

Even town officials could not agree whether to vote "aye" or "nay" on Article 12. Selectmen backed the plan, while the Capital Budget Committee recommended delaying the project.

The Advisory Board was split. Jane Goedecke told voters, "You'll have to figure it out for yourselves."

Clifford Mitman spoke for the Board of Selectmen.

"Clearly we have a space need and a need for consolidation of our Town departments under one roof," he said.

"The Town previously voted to keep the Town Hall auditorium in its present form," he explained, "so if we are going to do any renovation or expansion, it's got to be outside of the building as it now exists.

"We've already spent $60,000 in Town Hall studies," he added, "all of which have concluded that there is a real need for renovation and/or expansion."

Mitman nudged, "The longer we wait, obviously the more the cost is going to increase. At this point, the borrowing costs are relatively low. We should remember, quite a bit of the $940,000 is required."

He referred to requirements for access to the handicapped and state pressure for a new vault.

Mitman surprised other government officials when he announced, "The selectmen have voted that if this article passes, we would declare the Bates Building a surplus and sell it."

He estimated the offset from such a sale at $200,000 to $250,000.

Goedecke of the Advisory Board replied, "We looked at the need and I don't think any of us disagreed that there is a need for handicapped access."

She added, "None of us feel that there is not a need for adequate vault space and we all feel that we need adequate space for our Town employees.

"Until this moment," she said, "we did not know that the selectmen had voted to declare the Bates Building surplus.

"But," she added, "the $900,000 figure was quite high, given the things that were mentioned as absolute necessities."

On behalf of the Advisory Board, she recommended delaying passage of the plan.

"We haven't had enough time to look at this particular project," she concluded.

Chairman Edwin Tebbetts of the Capital Budget Committee concurred with Goedecke's advice.

He explained, the Town Hall troubles fall fourth on his committee's list of seven priority items scheduled for the next five years.

Tebbetts warned, compounding the borrowing debts of such big ticket items as sewer upgrading and a dump transfer station, the burden on town taxes would be tough.

Committee member John Vivian agreed the cost seemed excessive. He compared the proposed addition to luxury housing.

Vivian estimated the addition to Town Hall would cost about $150 per square foot, while luxury housing he said, would cost $80 - $85 per square foot.

He added, "hidden costs" had not been taken into account in the proposal's price.

"We don't know whether the existing boilers will take doubling the size of the building," he said. "That's not part of that cost; that's another $17,000 probably.

"There are no sprinklers in the main building," he added. "There's no air conditioning in the main building. The total for those extras could amount to about $100,000 more."

Benjamin Blake, chairman of the Town Hall Study Committee disputed Vivian's assessment.

He argued, Vivian did not include floor space in the basement, which he said would be utilized; Blake calculated the price at $100 per square foot.

Also, he explained, the architects Donham and Sweeney had based their estimates on similar recent constructions.

He added, costs seemed high because of special required items, such as an elevator with doors on two sides, ramps and bathrooms designed for the handicapped, and a vault, of which the door alone he said, would cost $15,000.

Finally, the voters decided to delay the expenditure for further study.

"Our home is important to us, so we want to make sure that it's well protected. That's why we chose Liberty Mutual for our homeowners policy. They have lots of different money-saving programs. And if we need to change or update our policy, it's easy to do because there's a Liberty office nearby. Call your local Liberty Mutual office and compare. You'll see why we believe in Liberty."

The town prepares to welcome new friends . . .

June 29 and return July 2.

They will celebrate the Fourth of July with an American-style picnic and fireworks at the home of Mildred and Clifford Mitman.

The Music Circus has invited the visitors to the Roy Clark concert July 6. A cookout will follow at the home of Peter and Judy Keim.

The Prudhommes and the Dines will leave for Souppes-sur-Loing July 7.

The cultural exchange committee has distributed small flag stands with the American and French flags to local merchants to mark the mayor's visit, Lawrence said. Also, a French flag will fly over the town common while the mayor is here.

Because Mayor Prudhomme speaks little English, interpreters will be present at all activities. Interpreters include Rosette Greco, Jacqui Fahey, Jacqueline Dormitzer, Jane Goedecke, Jan Pyle, Jocelyn Kennedy, Paul Markiewicz and George Fortin.

The committee will be selling Cohasset Bicentennial flags to help offset costs of the mayor's visit.

Judy Keim is chairman of the cultural exchange committee. Other members are Mildred Mitman, Elizabeth Warren, Marylou Lawrence, Rosette Greco, Paul Markiewicz, Carolyn Contis, Cathy St. Onge, and John Lennon.

The committee would like to thank the following merchants for their donations:

Cohasset Rotary Club—$200; Peter Logan, Cohasset Liquors—Wine for town-wide reception; Cohasset Historical Trust—Cooperation in production of Cohasset Bi-Centennial flag; Don Andrew—time in helping to make Souppes comfortable and welcome, American Flag; Doris Golden—ceramic tile of the Lothrop House; Garden Club—tour and tea, presentation of cookbook; Historical Society-cup plates and generous use of the Lothrop House; Hagerty's—tour of Cohasset Colonial; Chamber of Commerce, $50; League of Women Voters—T-shirts; Cohasset Girl Scouts—Girl Scout flag; Cards and Shards—Paper products; and Ron Goodwin—French flag; Thomas O'Brien—use of van for transportation; Kimball's by the Sea—foraccommodations fordinner plans, Friday, June 27.

Invitation to a twinning

Date: Saturday, June 28
Time: 5 to 6:30 p.m.
Place: Lothrop House, Summer Street
Dress: As you are

Wine and soft drinks—compliments of Peter Logan, Cohasset Liquors. Hors d'oeuvres—compliments of the Cohasset Cultural Exchange Committee.

Bring your family and friends and come and share an hour of food and drink with the town of Cohasset and our sister, Souppes-sur-Loing.

Both the selectmen and the Cultural Exchange Committee have made every effort to make this event a town-wide occasion so everyone will have an opportunity to honor the twinning of the sister cities. The informal atmosphere will provide the guest of honor, Mayor Prudhomme, a chance to view his newly adopted kin in all of her native colors.

No speeches—just good food and drink and friends. Don't miss it!

minute with each individual. "We'll say hi! and allow each person to introduce themselves," she said. "It's very quick and informal. There's no need to be nervous."

One of the most important criteria for being cast in "Witches" is the availablity of the individual. "Each person will be asked if they are available throughout the time we will be shooting in the state. Some people will be on vacation at that time, so it might work out well. But they have to be available when we tell them to be," she said.

The directors will be looking for real-life people, not Hollywood stereotypes. People of ages, "from about six years old to senior citizens," are needed for the film, Larkin added.

"We'll use as many of the extras as we can," she said. "You don't have to be talented, just natural."

Filming in the Cohasset area will begin July 14. Selections of the extras cast will be made within a week or two of the open casting call.

"We won't be notifying everyone at once whether they got a part," she stated. "So don't think just because you weren't called you didn't get in the film."

A celebrated arts schedule this weekend. . .

Norwell.

Prior to the puppet-making workshop will be a visit to the Town Hall by the Poobley Greegy Puppets who will perform at 11 a.m. Puppeteers Janice and Stephen Babcock, the puppets and props will perform, "Dynasty IV: Prime Time Egypt," a story based on the "Sorcerer's Apprentice."

From 10 a.m. to dusk on Friday, the grand yellow and blue tents will be set up on on the Cohasset Common. Art exhibits and many weekend activities will take place within the tent throughout the weekend.

Prior to the festival, tickets for a raffle may be purchased at the Center, 103 Ripley Road. During the festival, tickets may be purchased on the festival grounds at the Common.

Works to be raffled off include a colored pencil drawing by Becky Haletky, "Rosalyn Hill, London;" a Chinese brush painting by Eleanor Avakian; a watercolor by Helen Gallop, "Day Lillies," and a limited edition print by Roy Thompsen, "Screech Owls." Raffle tickets are $1 apiece or $5 for six.

At 10:30 a.m. Saturday, the Patriot Ledger Awards ceremony will take place at the Common. Winning pieces of art created by school children throughout the South Shore will be honored during this annual awards presentation.

The Poobley Greegy Puppets will perform at Twon Hall at 11 a.m. followed by an artist demonstration by Judeth Van Hamm Wiers on the Common.

From noon to 1 p.m., there will be a children's art drop-in with Gil Coyle at the Town Hall. There will also be a special carillon concert from 4 to 6 p.m. at St. Stephen's Church.

Throughout the day there will be special children's art workshops.

From 6 to 8 p.m. there will be the President's Choice Opening Reception, featuring the watercolors of Ruth Cobb. Showing concurrently is an exhibit of work by artists in Virginia Avery's Virgin Island workshop.

At 7:30 p.m., there will be performances of the South Shore Concert Band, sponsored by the Cohasset Recreation Commission. The concert, free to the public, will take place at the Common.

Each year, president Dillon said, the festival attracts between 2 to 3,000 people to Cohasset. Although donations are requested at some of the events, Dillon viewed the festival as a chance for the Center to give something back to the communities it serves.

"The main purpose of the festival is to exhibit the art and connect the artists with the public," she said. "Although there is a fundraising benefit, most of the activities we have planned depend on funding from the arts lottery and the Joseph Drown Foundation. With the funding we receive, we are able to present most of the activities, including all the children's events except the puppet theatre, for no charge."

The center's president explained between 150-200 volunteers work on the annual festival. Their efforts begin in February, she noted. The cost of the weekend festivities totals between $8,000 and $12,000.

Stephen Baird

"We're really showing off the work of our artists. It's something we offer to the community, and in turn we ask the community to support the center," Dillon said. "We are also supported by 59 businesses from Scituate, Braintree, Hingham, Quincy, Hanover, Norwell, Cohasset and Weymouth. Many other businesses donate "in-kind" donations."

The event of the weekend promises to be "smashing" according to Dillon. That is Sunday's 8 p.m. concert at the Music Circus featuring the combined bands of Woody Herman and Lionel Hampton. A gala dinner at a beautiful seaside estate will precede the concert where Herman will greet the guests. Shuttle service will transport the dinner guests to the 8 p.m. Music Circus concert. Only those patrons who purchased tickets prior to June 14 will enjoy this unusual and extravagant evening of food and music.

Dillon is also enthusiastic about the juried crafts show at the Common. Talented craftspeople from throughout the area will be included in this first-ever juried show. "I'm really looking forward to this," she said. "We'll have 28 craftspeople exhibiting their artwork on the Common. It really will be beautiful."

around town

☐ The senior class' choice for the recipient of the Golden Apple Award was a grand one..Al MacDonald is a special man, and extremely dedicated to his profession, as well as his students. This writer was one of the lucky ones to have had Mr. MacDonald and would like to add that he certainly taught me the meaning of English in every sense. I'm also sure that our class would have voted him the winner as well!

☐ Congratulations to Bob Tis, who recently graduated from Arkette with honors. He majored in journalism, and is in South Africa on a research program studing apartheid.

☐ There is a new lawyer in Cohasset...William A. Caldwell of 433 King Street passed the local bar exam recently.

☐ There are grandparents all over Cohasset just bursting with pride this week...Kearin and Barbara Dunn have a brand new little granddaughter, Caitlin Ann Trundorf, born on June 8th at 9:26 a.m and she weighed 7 lbs, 11 ozs. Caitlin was born in Miles Memorial Hospital in Damariscotta, Maine. Mom Maureen (Dunn) and Dad Michael Turndorf are doing just great too!

☐ Martha and Arne Gjesteby are busting their buttons too, they have a new grandson! Their daughter, Ingrid Janes, gave birth to their first grandchild, William Adam Janes. William tipped the scales at 7 lbs 4 ozs. and sure has caused a lot of excitement!

☐ Finally, Alexandra Duggan... Alexandra is a real lucky baby, she has two sets of Grandparents living in Cohasset! Alexandra, daughter of Chris and Terry Duggan, has Frank and Kaye England and Tom and Terese Duggan to cater to her every whim, and I'll bet they do just that!

☐ It certainly will be a summer full of stars in our little town, between the "Witches of Eastwick" and the South Shore Music Stars! Exciting to have Cohasset make the "big time", wonder how many Cohassetites will become "stars"!

☐ Frederic P. Zotos has certainly distinguished himself at Northeastern University this year!! He is in his third year of studies in Mechanical Engineering, maintaining honors grades, been active in extra-curricular activities, and done two years of Cooperative work! He has served as President of NU's Student Chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, was initiated to Pi Tau Sigma (the National Mechanical Engineering Honor Society), and he received the ASME-Ferretti Award at the Mechanical Engineering Honors Banquet held at NU. Frederic is the son of Professor and Mrs. John Zotos.

☐ This week marks the end of school, and the beginning of lots of vacation news...be sure that you report your news, its fun to share it!

☐ Paul A. and Abigail D. Plante of 34 Elm Street, recently had a son, Paul Anthony Plante, Jr. He was born June 1 at Parkland Medical Center in Derry, N.H. Maternal grandparents are Dr. and Mrs. Roger W. Davis of Springfield, Vermont. The paternal grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. Patrick A. Plante of Cohasset. Paul Jr.'s great grandmother is Olga Dellafano of Cohasset.

☐ Our hats are off to David Conlan, son of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Conlan of 237 Forest Ave. David graduated from Newman Preparatory School of Cambridge as the salutatorian, and he received the Headmaster's Award.

☐ Other Cohasset grads include two from Tufts University, during its 130th commencement. Congratulations to Christine Frances Barrett and Christine Claire Birmann.

☐ In the Burke family, graduation meant a "mini-reunion." Rita and Tom Burke's family had a wonderful one on the occasion of their youngest of seven, Andrea's, graduation from Harvard. Joanne (CHS 1966) came from Santa Monica, California; John came in from Austin, Texas; and Christopher (along with his wife Marguerite and 16 month-old Anna) arrived from Chicago. Andrea received her Bachelor of Arts Cum Laude. Her singing talent directed her extra cirricular involvement in many Campus musical productions.

☐ Ray Remick and Ozzie Ingram were among nine volunteer drivers for the Service Committee of the South Shore Unit of the American Cancer Society who have been cited for their work in transporting cancer patients to Boston and local area hospitals. At a tea and reception in the Hersey House, Hingham, they were presented pins for having made 25 or more trips during the past year. Making the presentation was Carolyn Housman, immediate past chairperson of the Service Committee, and a member of the staff of the Social Service League in Cohasset. As part of its program, the Service Committee maintains a Cancer Hotline (749-2535) to arrange transportation and provide other services to cancer patients. Other volunteer drivers from Cohasset are Al Livingston and Dave Chittim. The Service Committee is always eager to enlist additional drivers, be sure to give them a call if you can give them a little of your time! And, we certainly salute the gentlemen named above for their efforts.

☐ Speaking of hard-working gentlemen, Al Odermatt has done it again! This time there were 94 donors and volunteers who participated in the Cohasset Triannual Bloodmobile that was held Monday, June 16 at the Unitarian Parish House. Al was chairman of this Bloodmobile.

☐ We want to wish Anne Crawford the best as she departs from our town, on her way to her new home in Florida. She will spend time in Canada with relatives first, then on to her new adventure she goes . . . keep in touch Anne, let us know how life is in the "Sunny South."

☐ That's the news from here for this week, be sure to fill us in on your vacation news!

Dramatic club plans

At its recent 1986 Annual Meeting the Cohasset Dramatic Club announced the names of two of the three plays chosen for presentation in the Club's forthcoming 1986-87 community theater season.

The coming season will be the Club's 66th season at Cohasset's Town Hall. Picked for presentation as the Club's fall show is "Alice In Wonderland", to be directed by Ellen Kelly.

Next winter's Town Hall show will be the popular "Light Up The Sky", directed by Denise Ripley. Dates of performances for the fall and winter shows will be announced later. The Dramatic Club also is planning a production for the spring of 1987, with name and presentation dates to be announced.

Chosen at the recent Annual Meeting as new members of the Club's board of Directors were Paul Cifrino, Julia Jordan and Helen Ketcham of Cohasset and Harry Heineman of Scituate. Officers of the Club for the forthcoming season are: John Kuhn, President; Harry Heineman, Vice President; Jan Higbee, Secretary; Tamsyn Elliott, Assistant Secretary; and Arthur Paquette, Treasurer.

Of the two announced 1986-87 shows, "Alice In Wonderland" will be a Town Hall premiere, and Moss Hart's "Light Up The Sky" was performed by the Club in November of the year 1951.

The 1986-87 community theater season marks the Dramatic Club's 66th year of presenting "worthwhile shows for dramatic, charitable and social benefit". Tryouts for "Alice In Wonderland" will be held in the early fall and will be announced as soon as dates are set.

Anyone, veteran or neophyte, interested in working with the Dramatic club in its presentation of community theater productions is invited to watch for further announcements of Club activities. Volunteers will be needed for work both on stage and in production behind-the-scenes.

Science Center wins grant

Lois Burke Shepard, Director of the Institute of Museum Services, recently announced that South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell is among 409 museums who will receive Fiscal Year 1986 General Operating Support (GOS) awards.

Some 1345 museums applied for the one year grants which are made on a competitive basis. The grants assist museums to strengthen and improve their operations.

Faith Burbank, director of South Shore Natural Science Center, noted, "we are thrilled to be recognized by our peers and to be awarded this nationally competitive and highly sought after grant. The award of $21,300 will make a significant difference and will allow us to strengthen the Center's operations, exhibitions and programs."

The grant will enable the Natural Science Center to develop an Intern Program and strengthen the Interpreter Program. In addition, funds will be used to implement Museum Assessment Program recommendations, leading to future accreditation by the American Association of Museums (AAM). Education outreach programs, professional development and outdoor exhibits will also receive support from this award.

The Institute of Museum Services, an independent agency within the National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities, was established by Act of Congress in 1976 to assist museums in their educational role and to help them modernize their methods and facilities so that they will be better able to preserve the nation's cultural, historic and scientific heritage.

A perfect weekend

Town meeting is over and the summer now lingers before us.

This week has been hectic as the latest edition of Cohasset's special town meeting draws to a conclusion.

As we look to the end of the week we will find the art center extravaganza coinciding with the arrival of our friends from France.

The story of our sister city is actually quite interesting. The association between World War II hero Thomas Churchill and the town he liberated is the stuff novels are made of.

Although we were rushed into forming a committee and developing plans to greet our foreign visitors - the project has been completed.

The town owes much to the Cultural Exchange Committee members. Imagine - just a few months ago this committee didn't even have a name. Now we are preparing to embrace our French friends, thanks to the tireless efforts of these committee members.

We hope the community responds to the invitation issued by the Cultural Exchange Committee and we have crowds this Saturday at the Lothrop House. This is the "come as you are" party where the public will have the opportunity to meet informally with members of the French entourage. It's a perfect opportunity to show off the Cohasset charm and embrace our new-found friends.

In addition to awaiting the arrival of the citizens of Souppes, there is the art center festival to enjoy.

The serene common will be transformed into a sea of people, art work and crafts under the billowing sails of the tents along the common. It promises to be a family weekend. Events for the children have been scheduled throughout the three-day event. What a wonderful way to spend a Sunday afternoon.

Participate in the arts festival throughout the weekend. Sunday evening, after leaving the Lothrop House reception, walk over to the common. Spread the blanket and enjoy a summer picnic supper while listening to the unique carillon concert from St. Stephen's Church.

It promises to be a perfect weekend to start our summer. And all this perfection is within walking distance of your front door.

There are over 125 boat owners who have paid their mooring fee, but have not picked up their decals and placed them on their boats.

Under Section 2 (ii) of the Harbor Bylaws it states: (On and after July 1, 1983 all boats) moored in Cohasset Harbor will be required to display an annual decal on the port quarter aft of the boat to indicate that the mooring fee is paid for the year and that the boat is authorized to be on the mooring.

Failure to comply with all harbor laws are subject to a $100 a day fine.

NEWS ITEM — Hollywood casts spell on Cohasset. 'The best choice,' said Warner Brothers exec. 'The Witches of Eastwick' starring Jack Nicholson will be filmed in the Village area, which has all 'the right angles.' 1st Parish Church is a focal point. Hochkeppel featured in Christo play

Cohasset resident Molly Hochkeppel will be featured in the Christo's Dinner Theatre production Not Now Darling July 10, 11, 17, 18 and 19.

Darling Productions is celebrating its fifth anniversary at the Route 27 Brockton location with a reprise of its signature show, a racy British farce.

The show mixes amorous couples, scantily-clad models, fur coats and champagne into a funny, frothy summer souffle.

Molly plays Ambrosine Tipdale, a proper British secretary embroiled in some highly improper situations at a London fur salon.

She has successfully suppressed a New Jersey accent in a number of British comedies, including No Sex Please, We're British, Shut Your Eyes and Think of England, Uproar in the House, and two previous productions of Not Now Darling.

Molly has also been featured in such American comedies as Good Night Ladies, Exit the Body, Love, Sex and the IRS, Romantic Comedy, Prisoner of Second Avenue and Plaza Suite.

Her most recent appearance at Christo's was in Cheaters.

The company previously performed Not Now Darling in summer stock at the Priscilla Beach Theatre in Manomet and the Old Colony Theatre in Plymouth and at the Dunphey's Dinner Theatre in Hyannis.

Molly is one of the three prime movers behind Darling Productions; and has served as both set designer and production manager for all shows.

Executive producer for the group is George Steven of Braintree. Jim Leonard of Hingham heads up construction.

Both are also featured in Not Now Darling.

The rest of the summer season includes the comedy Suitehearts on July 31, and August 1, 3, 6, 7 and 8; and the musical Cole August 20, 21, 22, 27, 28 and 29.

Suitehearts will star Cohasset actors Eric Joseph and Greg Pownall, and some of the Cole Porter tunes in Cole will be sung by recent Cohasset High graduate Glen Hochkeppel.

The tickets, at $17.50 each, include a full course dinner and the show. Dinner choices are roast beef, chicken cordon bleu and broiled scrod.

Cocktail hour starts at 6:30 p.m. each night, dinner at 7:30 p.m., followed by the show at 9 p.m.

For information on ticket reservations, please call Christo's office at 588-4202.

Opposition to filming in Cohasset

Letters

To the Editor:

Despite the apathy and even approval of some of my fellow townspeople, I, for one, oppose the filming of "Witches of Eastwick," in Cohasset. I believe the filmmakers are not our friends at all. On the contrary, I think these people are simply exploiting our town and will use us and our beautiful location to our disadvantage.

Many of our ancestors in Cohasset would be appalled at the subject matter of this film. To suggest that Cohasset has always been friendly to drama and the profession of acting is completely beside the point. Many modern films are tasteless and immoral, and have nothing whatsoever to do with the quality productions of the past. Where are the people of Cohasset who have the courage to oppose this disgrace? I hope that the time does not come when we will regret this ill-advised decision to permit Cohasset to be used for such a film. Our town has so much more to be proud of.

End of an era at the Red Lion inn. . .

their arrival in Cohasset.

They leased the Red Lion from Cohasset native son Everett Wheelwright. In 1947 they purchased the historical building and began a renovation project that never seemed to be completed.

Hand-hewn beams, hardwood paneling, wide pine floors and authentic fireplaces were uncovered and showcased in the refurbished Red Lion.

The renovation project had a reverse impact on the impressionable young boy who helped his parents manage the 12-room inn and operate the busy dining room. Cone recently purchased a "simple, new home without one antique in the whole place. The plumbing, the heating, everything is new. I don't want to see one more antique!" Cone exclaimed in mock horror. "It's not a flashy home, but it's new." His new residence is located in Deering, N.H.

He also muttered something about antique renovations that never end.

Cone will be dividing his time between his new residence and work at the Red Lion. For as long as he is required, Cone will help manage the business for the new owners.

The same staff, many of whom have been with Cone for 20 to 30 years, have been asked to stay on with the new management. "With the part-time help such as dish washers and cook's assistants we employ about 50 people here," he said, noting the busiest times are the weekend night and the three months of the summer. "We do one-third of our total year's business in those three summer months."

"An establishment that is very much a part of the community. I want my customers to feel a part of the restaurant. It's been very gratifying to see three generations of the same family as my customers."

Since his parents owned the Red Lion, the Cones attempted to create "an establishment that is very much a part of the community," he said. "I want my customers to feel a part of the restaurant. It's been very gratifying to see three generations of the same family as my customers. Many of my current diners used to work for me when they were in school.

"I like to think I've participated in the community," he added. "Whether it was donations to churches, free meals to various groups, offering a free meal to some raffle, I liked to help out. We're not talking predigious sums of money, but I think I've helped the community in some ways."

By his own admission, Cone, who attended Cornell University's college of hotel management, is a philosopher, a practical joker, gregarious and faithful to the inn-keeper's oath - he never gossips about his customers.

"I'm not going to tell you any secrets," he answered in reply to an inquisition. "There really is no specific oath, but one thing is so important. The customers should be able to trust their inn keeper. People's affairs are their own business, not mine. A sure fire way for the inn keeper to destroy his business is to be a gossip."

His simple philosphy - see no evil. "Sometimes that's a bit difficult in this business. People in a restaurant tend to expose themselves to some degree, they open up," he stated. "Some of the things I could tell you would tear this community apart - but I never will!"

Residents of Cohasset tend to think of the Red Lion as their 'own' restaurant. It's a place where the locals can walk in and sit down at their favorite table. The waitresses, most of whom have worked for Cone for years, know many of the customers by name.

"To a certain extent, we do cater to our regular customers," Cone said. "We try to accommodate them, but we will be courteous to anyone who enters our restaurant."

The Red Lion has a tradition of fine steaks, although the fish fare is extensive, excellent, and enjoying a renewed popularity among the health-conscious public, Cone noted.

"So many people come in here and say they're on a diet so they order fish - fried clams! A lot of good that will be on a diet!" he said. "I have one simple rule for a diet. It could be a one-sentence diet book. Use a smaller plate. Period. The smaller plate will give you smaller portions. That's it."

Although the menu contains an overflow list of scrumptious meals, Cone noted sadly he has lost his sense of taste. Where once he was asked to sample new dishes, he now must refuse. The cancer treatment dissolved the sense of taste for the patient, although doctors said he will someday regain that ability so essential to a restaurateur.

The inn includes 12 rooms on the second and third floors of the building. Half the rooms are occupied permanently by male boarders. Cone and his daughter share a small apartment on the second floor. One of the boarders has stayed at the Red Lion for 36 years. Many performers from the Music Circus once roomed at the inn.

That was when week-long shows were featured at the summer theatre on Sohier Street. Now that stars perform for single nights, there is no need for accommodations at the inn.

Never a fancier of Hollywood and the glamorous stars, Cone said most of the performers have eaten at the restaurant through the years. As a youngster he can remember when Louis Armstrong and his band had supper at the restaurant. John Carradine and Reginald Gardner were frequent guests. Cone recalls them as gracious, courteous and accommodating diners.

Patrons of the restaurant, anxious to obtain an autograph, are as courteous, he said. "I'll tell them to wait until the performer has finished his dinner. There's nothing worse than to be rudely interrupted during dinner. But that's why the stars come here. They know they can enjoy their meal in peace and the other customers will respect them."

One star however, found that not to be the case.

As Cone told it, Zsa Zsa Gabor was appearing at the Music Circus several years ago. It was a busy summer night at the Red Lion and, as usual, Cone was filling in for some missing employee. That night he was at the grill, covered from head to toe in black grease.

Zsa Zsa and her entourage entered the quaint restaurant, and immediately she started to shout for a waitress. As the waitress prepared the table,

"My approach to life has always been to find a little humor and kindness in everyone. If you are nice to people, they will return the kindness."

took drink orders and the busboy served water, Zsa Zsa started banging the water glasses with a spoon.

Although the experienced waitress attempted to quiet the celebrity, Zsa Zsa became increasingly irritated.

The exasperated waitress finally ran into the kitchen and requested Cone's assistance in the rear dining room. Cone, dressed in his sooty white chef's outfit came to the table.

Zsa Zsa stared at the greasy sight, and huffed "whooo are yooooou?"

The infuriated owner ("I was having a bad night, I didn't need this!" he recalled) politely stated to the glamorous star, "Miss Gabor. There is obviously no way we are going to please you here. I suggest you leave immediately."

The stunned celebrity left the restaurant, and never returned. Years later, when stars from the Music Circus came to the Red Lion, they'd walk up to Cone and exclaim, "So you're the one who dared to throw Zsa Zsa out of your restaurant." A free drink usually accompanied their bemused greeting.

Cone is saddened to leave the public life he has led in Cohasset. "My approach to life has always been to find a little humor and kindness in everyone. If you are nice to people, they will return that kindness," he said, demonstrating his philosophic demeanor.

"You have to take the time to smell the roses. Although," he added in a typically sarcastic manner, "I've known a lot of people who have stopped to smell the roses a little too long and let everyone else take of them."

Cohasset soccer squads shoot for state crown

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Two Cohasset soccer squads have attained a lofty goal, participation in a state championship tournament.

"We're the first two teams this town has ever had in the tournament," Larry Shultz said of the 19-and-under Coastal Youth Soccer League team he coaches and of the 16-and-under team his son, Bobby coaches.

Shultz's team acheived a 7-0-1 record during the regular season and beat Scituate 1-0 in a play off game to advance to the state tournament, which will be held Saturday at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

"There isn't anyone that really stood out," Shultz said of his squad, comprised mostly of graduating seniors from Cohasset High School. "There are 18 kids who all played magnificently.

"They all did their jobs," he added. "The fullbacks were outstanding and the forwards put the ball in the net when it had to be in. Everything fell in place."

Shultz credited the outstanding play of his team to Cohasset High School's departing varsity coach Jon Anderson, who is going to Babson College next year.

"I simply substituted," Shultz said. "The kids pretty much ran the team. They knew what defense to be in and they covered the corners the way they had been taught by Jon Anderson."

Shultz predicted his team's hard work will pay off at the tournament.

"I've substituted the 18 kids in equal fashion," he said, "Everybody has had equal time. Everybody has been in crunch time and everybody has performed admirably."

He added, "I know one thing; we'll play well. Whether we'll win or lose, I don't know; no one can predict that. But it doesn't matter, because these kids are going to go out and give 100 percent."

Shultz recalled how his squad overcame adversity early in the season to become league champions.

"In a couple of games at the beginning of the season," he said, "we gave the other team a two goal lead. It seemed we were always down 2-0 or 3-1, but they never quit. They always came back and in only one game did they come up short.

"We were down 2-0 to Kingston," he said, "and we came back to tie them midway through the second half."

He added, "Then we played Kingston for the last game of the season to determine who would win our section. We went down to Kingston and blew them off the field, 3-0.

"It was no contest. The kids were just magnificent."

Larry's son Bobby, who played on his father's team, coached a squad comprised mostly of high school sophomores to a 10-0 overall record.

The 16-and-unders will also battle in Amherst this weekend for the state crown.

Bobby Shultz credited much of his team's success to the superlative play of the Reidy brothers, Joel and Jim.

"Joel is our goalkeeper," he said, "and he's had an outstanding season. He doesn't let anything by him; he's a great competitor.

"Jim is our center halfback and he basically controls the offense and defense. He's our stabilizing force out in the field. He leads the team both in goals and assists."

Shultz's team barely advanced to Amherst, as they squeaked past Norwell, 4-2 in double-overtime.

"That was the toughest game we had all year," he said.

Shultz said his team may have an edge going into the tournament.

"Most of these kids are sophomores and a lot of them came up to the varsity squad (Cohasset High School) when we went to the state tournament, so they have tournament experience and I think that will be a big factor.

"I'm looking for leadership from a couple of kids," he said. "I've been particularly pleased with the play of Ian Smart, our stopper back and our outside fullbacks, Peter Buckley and Dan Bliss."

Shultz added, he's looking for a big tournament offensively from forwards Jason Marsac and Ned Chase.

"It's tough to single out players on the team because everyone has played so well," he added. "We're a team; we're not a bunch of individuals and I think that's a key to our success.

"Everybody's a friend out there," he said. "No one's trying out there to be a hero. Everyone's out there for one thing and that's for the team to win."

South Shore girls (w)hoop it up at Cohasset camp

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Leaping young ladies of the South Shore have been slam-dunking with self-confidence at Cohasset's Coastal Basketball Camp this week.

Edward Amaral, the varsity boys basketball coach at Hanover High School and Bill Fallon, the varsity girls basketball coach at Cohasset High School this week conducted their third annual girls basketball camp at Cohasset High School.

"The whole basis," Amaral said of the camp, "is really to learn fundamentals and enjoy yourself while you do it.

"Working with girls aged 10-16," he explained, "a lot of what we're doing are self-esteem types of things. Once you can get them feeling good about themselves and believing they can succeed, they usually go at it a little bit harder, with more enthusiasm."

He added, "Bill and I both have the same philosophy. I think we're both a reasonably low key type of people.

"You stay on the kids," he said. "It's a very motivational type of thing, but from a very positive point of view. We stress the positive because you can correct the negative that way."

The camp includes competitions such as one-on-one, three-on-three and foul shooting. Also, there is a camp championship tournament.

"But we don't make a big deal of winning or losing," Amaral quickly pointed out. "That's not a big deal.

"You can get caught up in winning," he added; "everybody wants to win, don't misunderstand me, but you've got to start with the basics. The key is how you approach the whole thing.

"I think if that's done in a reasonable way, you'll probably have more success over the long haul than you would just thinking about the wins."

Aside from the competitions, there are lectures.

"Everyday," Amaral said, "there's going to be a lecture or two on offense, defense, shooting, rebounding, passing or whatever.

"When we started Monday," he said, "we told them, 'You're not going to leave here on Friday a great basketball player, but hopefully, what you should leave here with is an attitude about what it takes to know the fundamentals, to just know what you should be doing."

Friday, the last day of camp, each camper will get a drill book and an evaluation form telling them what they need to work on and what they do well.

"When they leave," Amaral said, "they can remind themselves of the things we have done and what they should do themselves. They should leave the week knowing how to play the game."

According to the coach, his camp has become quite popular since its inception and a high percentage of hoopsters have returned each year.

He said, "A couple of kids today came over and said, 'I've gotten better, haven't I Mr. Amaral?' They know it themselves; they see it.

"I said to one of them, a senior girl, 'Tiffany, you must have done your drills,' and she said, 'I wanted to be a player like you said; I did do my drills.'

"It shows," he said, "and she is a much better player now than she was last year. She worked at it and that's what I think the camp is about as much as anything else."

He explained, "I go back to self-esteem, because so much of it is self-esteem with these kids. When you get kids believing and going at it, they know."

Amaral explained, between the lectures and competitions, there's a lot of kidding around.

"I missed a shot and said, 'That's the first shot I've missed in five years,'" he said with a laugh, "and some kids didn't have a clue whether I was serious or not. Other kids looked at me like, 'You're crazy.'

"Of course, when I missed my next five shots they were all over me."

The 20-year teaching and coaching veteran added, "I've done a lot of camps over the years and lectured at camps to get the point across about mentally, how you should play the game.

"I was in a camp last year with Larry Bird," he recalled, "and I told my campers how, when we played a pick-up game among the counselors, I happened to be guarding Larry Bird.

"Now, I came across with a straight face," he said, "but the kids didn't know whether this was true or not, and I said, 'We played for about a half hour and you know, he never scored a point in the jump shot.'

"They all looked at me saying, 'God, Larry Bird is so much bigger than him; how did he do that?' Then I made the comment, 'But he scored 50 points on layups.'"

He explained, "I got the point across that I didn't want him getting a jump shot off, so I got right up in his face so he couldn't shoot the jump, but he went right by me.

"Then," he said with a laugh, "I told them Dr. J didn't score any points with the layup because I played way off him."

Amaral said the mental approach to the game is an important part of what the girls are taught at the Coastal Basketball Camp.

"They feel good if they make a nice pass underneath the basket," he said, "or if they box out nicely and get a rebound.

"Some of them are young and they just turn and smile at me like, 'See coach, I did it,' you know?"

Silent Running in an Alden Ocean Shell

This is solitude. It's also one of the best total body workouts you can get—bar none. Rowing alone on the water gives you peace of mind. It also increases stamina, builds endurance and develops total fitness.

Rowing uses all the major muscle groups — legs, back, shoulders, arms, chest, thorax and abdomen—and it does it in a natural, rhythmic motion that is almost completely injury free.

Are you a runner? Competition sailor? Cross country skier? Why not stay in shape in an Alden Ocean Shell.

Master's thesis writer objects to witches film

A Waltham woman who wrote a master's thesis about Massachusetts witches, outlined to selectmen her objections to the filming of "Witches of Eastwick" in Cohasset.

Noting that modern American witches are constantly fighting the stereotype and are not Satanic, Darcie Callahan urged the board not to allow the filming here. "In this graphically violent and sexual film, three women consort with Satan under the label witchcraft. A movie of this sort will only reinforce this misrepresentation," she wrote to the board.

Remembering Len Bias at Red's training camp

By Matt Baron
Mariner Correspondent

(Matt, tri-captain of the Marshfield High School basketball team saw the late Len Bias at Red Auerbach's basketball camp in Marshfield last summer. Here are his observations.)

The game has ended much too soon for Len Bias. His tragic death last Thursday morning blew the whistle on the Celtics' basketball star before he ever had a chance to suit up.

It's almost as if someone's cheated, has re-written the rulebook to include this injustice.

And the worst part about it is we can't start the game over and give Len another chance.

The former University of Maryland player had everything — literally everything — within his grasp. Sadly, however, he apparently reached for cocaine his last night, resulting in his cardiac arrest.

What makes the Len Bias story all the more tragic is its complete shock effect. Before that Thursday morning, no obvious physical problems of any kind existed.

Only weeks earlier, he had easily passed extensive physical examinations administered by three pro teams. A remarkable physical speciman, they said, no trace of drugs. Nothing.

Upon first hearing Bias had died, I instantly thought of Marfan's Syndrome, a heart disorder associated with tall people that often goes undetected until it's too late.

Commentary

Now, as the facts trudge across the front page — the cocaine and the cover-up — something inside me wishes we never discovered the truth. And since the truth of Bias's drug use has surfaced, then somebody must be able to explain why he did it.

But, still, that is one question that Len Bias alone can answer: why.

His college coach might tell you one thing, his mother another and his teammate still another, but no one will ever really know why Len Bias — the 22-year old who could do it all — blew it all.

And no matter how hard the medical experts and friends rack their brains, the question will always linger.

I was a camper at Red Auerbach's basketball camp in Marshfield; Len was working out with the Celtics' draft choices at the Camp Milbrook training camp, waiting for his turn, for next year that never came.

He was quiet, introverted during his brief stay in Marshfield. Unless you knew his name or saw him play, you would have thought he was just another player vying for a spot on the Celtics roster.

He possessed both strength and grace capable of going through or over his opponent. He won the Camp slam-dunk contest in a landslide — you could just see Red Auerbach's eyes light up like a victory cigar. Next year, Red must have thought, as Bias quietly rested in his cabin, reading his Bible.

We were in the same cabin and he needed to borrow a flashlight. My friend Todd Klock of Marshfield had one with batteries almost worn out. When Len returned the flashlight at the end of the week, he had replaced the old batteries with new ones. The flashlight then shone as brightly as Bias's future.

Why did he go out of his way to buy Todd new batteries? Maybe Len needed the flashlight that badly, or maybe he was simply being a nice guy.

I guess we'll never know for sure.
